While the Admiralty refused to confirm reports that the navy was blockading Murmansk it did not deny the report. And near the Dardanelles several freighters outward bound from Russian ports were stopped and searched.

In part, this activity, no doubt, springs from sympathy for Finland in its fight against Soviet aggression but it also is directed towards detecting and preventing, if possible, any more direct collaboration between Germany and Russia.

The north Russian port of Murmansk served as a refuge for the German liner Bremen early in the war and Russian submarines are believed to be based there. The possibility that these submarines might slip out to serve with the German fleet or that German submarines might use the north Russian base for refueling and refitting is not being overlooked.

Coming on the heels of the Altmark incident and in the midst of the Finnish struggle, the Allied naval activity reported in the Arctic area naturally is disturbing to Norway and Sweden. Both states have put up with the sinking of their ships and other indignities from Germany in the hope that they can keep out of war. They have confined their assistance to Finland to strict non-military measures.

Despite all this the noose of war draws more closely about them. If the Allies blockade Murmansk and thus stop German traffic in and out of that port, the next step may be the stoppage of German traffic through Norwegian territorial waters. Germany might demand resistance to that from Norway and failing resistance resort to reprisals.

When Parliament Sat At 7 in the Morning

From the Manchester Guardian

From many sources come suggestions that we should alter our habits by making "early to bed" and "early to rise" our rule for wartime. There should be the less difficulty about that when it is remembered that it would be no more than a reversion to old custom and habit.

Thus Hooker, writing at the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, notes that the House of Commons met every day, the usual time of sittings being from eight till noon. A few years later the time of meeting was put at seven, and there is record of a sitting which began at 6 a. m.. In the second half of the seventeenth century the time of meeting was advanced to ten. But all through that period there were complaints against debating by artificial light.

If we pass from Parliament to the theatre we find that in 1663 a usual time for opening the theatres was half-past three, though by the end of the century the hour had advanced to five. But then, as now, it was no safe or pleasant business to navigate town streets after dark, and so business was got through in the morning and pleasure in the afternoon.

"Up betimes and very busy all the morning and dined at noon" is an entry which is common enough in a business man's diary. People dined heartily in those days and were accordingly anxious to get their business done first, by which means they could keep the afternoons free for private affairs; lawyers could be at their brightest before what is now lunch-time, and there was less danger of Parliament men "sheathing their swords in one another's bowels" before noon than after.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

Most Stomach Disturbances Are Not Due to Stomach Disease

"Generally speaking, about 25 per cent (1 in 4) of all stomach cases are due to some stomach disturbance. The remaining 75 percent result from disease near to or distant from the stomach". I am quoting Dr. Harry Martin Eberhard, Philadelphia, in Medical World.

As three of every four cases of stomach trouble are due to trouble in other parts of the body, Dr. Eberhard suggests that "specialists" must necessarily have considerable experience in general practice before engaging in the treatment of stomach and intestinal diseases only.

What are common causes of disturbances of the stomach in which the stomach itself is not to blame?

"Diseases in organs distant to the stomach capable of causing stomach symptoms are disturbances of vision; infections of teeth; tonsils, and sinuses; thyroid and other gland disturbances; diseases of the heart, kidneys and bloodvessels; diseases of the small intestine, gall bladder and bile ducts leading from liver and gall bladder; pancreas, liver, spleen, large intestine; anaemia; syphilis and other diseases".

In speaking of the great advance made in late years in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the contents of the stomach by means of the long tube (duodenal tube) which brings up fractions of the stomach digestive juice with ease so that the various phases of stomach digestion are made known.

"Then drainage of the gall bladder has been so standardized that samples of bile from the various levels of the bile tract can be easily obtained and examined under the microscope. Xray examinations of the entire stomach and intestines and gall bladder have been so developed that it can be accurately known whether or not true (organic) disease is or is not present."

From the above information given us by a "stomach" specialist, it can be readily seen why your physician may suggest a few days "observation" in hospital for examination of eyes, teeth, tonsils, blood, gall bladder or other organs or tissues when all your symptoms are in the stomach only.

American Engineer Predicts Russia's Fall in Spring

The Stalin regime in Russia "will be all washed up by spring," in the opinion of John K. Calder, Detroit engineer.

And coming from such a source, that opinion is important, because Calder built most of Russia's heavy industries, and was Stalin's right-hand man in the attempt to jam through the Five-Year Plan.

During the four-year period, from 1928 to 1934, Calder, because of his exploits, became almost a god in communist Russia.

He was the driving, slashing, tireless American engineer in the Richard Harding Davis tradition, who raised mighty steel plants from the bare plain, strung railroads through trackless wilderness, slapped down politicians—and got things done.

Calder's jurisdiction ran from the Arctic ocean to the Black Sea—from the Ukraine to the Pacific—wherever steel mills, tractor plants, copper smelters and railroads were being built. His travel diary was studded with such exotic place names as Murmansk, Stalingrad, Cheliabinsk, Magnitogorsk, Lake Balkash, Vladivostok and Samarkand.

And while he was on conversational terms with Stalin, Molotov, wigs, Calder talked just as assiduously with red soldiers, town workers and peasants—Russian people wherever he found them.

All this is by way of making plain that when Calder talks about Russia, he knows what he is talking about, and when he says that the Stalin regime is doomed, he must be listened to.

As might be expected from an engineer of Calder's type and experience, the Detroit engineer bases his prediction of bolshevik debacle on failure of the Russian transportation system, inability of the Russians to produce sufficient steel and other necessary materials, and rebellion of the Russ'an masses against fighting "after they have been starved for ten years."

Calder was found in a comfortable house on the outskirts of Dearborn, a house filled with oriental rugs and other mementos picked up through a lifetime of engineering work, most of it spent in out-of-the-way places known to ordinary persons only through the movies or travel literature.

"Yes, I have been watching the progress of the Finnish war, and the signs of weakness in the Red army," declared Calder, as he puffed on a cigarette. "And I do have some ideas as to what is apparently going on in Russia.

"I am disgusted with the whole Russian program. By next spring, I think the Stalin regime will be all washed up.

"I like the Russian people, and wish them well, but from what I know of the Russian set-up, and from what I can read into European developments, I think Russia is on the way out.

"I look for internal trouble in Russia if the Russians have to fight a real war, although I admit it will be difficult for the opposition to Stalin to form, because of the secret police. But if the war strain on the soviet system continues, look for a blow-up.

"I don't know what will happen to Russia if the bolsheviks are smashed. It is difficult to see who could organize another government. What would probably happen is that Great Britain, France and Germany would split up Russia.

"The trouble in the Soviet Union extends from top to bottom. The men at the top — the communist leaders — don't know what they are doing, or where they are going. They have simply been stumbling along. There is no chance of Russia getting anywhere as long as that bunch remains in control.

"And I say that, knowing most of them. Personally I found Stalin to be a nice enough fellow, as far as I was concerned. He backed me when he found I could get things done, particularly after the success I had in getting the first blast furnace up at Magnitogorsk. Kaganovich, who was Stalin's right-hand man in the heavy industries, who is now out, was a good friend of mine.

"That ouster of Kaganovich surprised me, because he and Stalin had been so close.

"But, as I said, the top Communists don't have enough on the ball to run a tremendous country such as Russia. They were able to get away with it under dictatorial rule, when the rest of Europe was letting them alone, but I think the Bolshevik system will break fast under war strains.

"The Russian people outside the Communist party—and there are only 175,000 party members out of 180,000,000 Russians — are just as fine people as you ever met. They are swell people. But they don't know how to work. They have never been taught how to work.

"And from what I know of the Russians, they don't fight any better than they work. You can't starve men for ten years and then expect them to fight for you.

"I have talked to a lot of Red soldiers—both officers and men.

"I have seen them from Murmansk to Vladivostok. Those stories from the Finnish front about soldiers with burlap tied around their feet for shoes did not tell me anything new. I have seen many Red soldiers with such miserable equipment. The Russians do have troops with leather boots and better uniforms, but they have a lot of others badly equipped.

"The Red soldiers also told me their rifles were no good.

"If Stalin pushes the Russians into war, the same thing will happen as happened in the last war.

"One day I asked a man who had been a colonel in the czar's army why the Russian army broke down last time. He told me:

" 'Well, our shoes wore out. And then the horses' shoes wore out. Everything wore out, and we couldn't get new material to replace it. So we just quit.'

"You can expect the same thing to happen now, if Stalin tries to fight a war, as he is doing.

"The Russian transportation system is absolutely nil. Nearly all of their railroad lines are only single-track. The rolling stock is bad. I have had a locomotive break down and have had to sit there in the train until the boiler tubes were repaired.

"The Russians can't possibly move large numbers of troops with their present equipment, and if they could move them, they could not keep them supplied.

"We have been hearing a lot about the Leningrad - Murmansk line, which supplies the Finnish fronts. I know that line. I have travelled it.

"It is simply a run-down, single track railroad running through some of the most God-forsaken country you ever saw.

"If the Finns blew up a few bridges, the line would probably be closed indefinitely.

"There is also talk about the Russians organizing an army to attack the Persian oil fields, or to invade India. I know all about that part of Russia down there, and I say it would be absolutely impossible for the Russians to organize and supply a Red army in that part of the world that could bother the British and French.

"Aside from the transportation problem, where are the Russians going to get enough steel to fight a war! Only two of the ten blast furnaces at Magnitogorsk are working. They are only getting approximately 4,000 tons of steel a month from their three steel centres, which is only about 15½ per cent of their needs. Russia has to import steel.

"The coking coal problem is serious. They have to bring it 2,500 kilometres (1,600 miles). Which brings us back again, of course, to the bad transportation facilities.

"What I am saying now is nothing new. I told the same things to President Roosevelt and Cordell Hull when they called me to Washington, after I got back from Russia. I repeated them when they had me down there again about six weeks ago.

"I travelled all over European and Asiatic Russia, and I have yet to find anybody enthusiastic about the soviet regime.

"If they fight the way they work, they will never get to first base.

"I am absolutely against the Communist party, and I repeat. I think Stalin will be all washed up by spring."—Russell Barnes in Detroit Times.

Eastern Ontario Garage Operators Hold Banquet

The Hotel Belvedere was recently the scene of the annual general meeting of the local branch of The Garage Operators Association of Ontario. A crowded banquet hall showed the interest and enthusiasm of Hastings and Prince Edward members who attended in large numbers. Out of town guests were William "Bill" Bailey, Provincial President of the Garage Operators Association and Pat MacPherson, General Manager. Also Art Wadham publisher of the "Garage Operator" official organ of the association.

Local president J. B. "Bert" Boyce delivered a resume of the association dealing with its infancy and growth in this district, concluding with the stirring words, "Let's take off our hats to the past and our coats to the future." Bill Davies, local secretary, read the reports covering the progress made by the association on this past year, showing that many new members had been added to the ever increasing number.

Leo Riggs delivered an address extolling the merits of the leaders since its inception in this district, and on behalf of the members presented suitably inscribed gavels to the presidents of the last three years; Howard Aselstine of 1937, Claude Graham of 1938 and Bert Boyce of 1939.

Election officers for 1940 was held and the following directors sit for the ensuing year: Doug Moxam, Walker Grills, Don Brown, Jack Trudeau, Ivan Scott and Clarence Gibson for Belleville; Roy Hyde and Claude Graham for Trenton; Harold Wells for Stirling; James Noxon for Picton; George Forestell for Marmora; Milton Burtt for Tweed and Don Dawson for Deseronto; also Ken Vivian for Shannonville and Floyd Ketcheson for Frankford. From these directors was elected Jack Trudeau of Belleville for president for 1940 and, it was the general consensus of opinion of the members that a more fitting choice could not be made. Under his capable leadership the directors for the various districts will certainly give of their best.

A few well chosen words were spoken by Bill Bailey, Pat MacPherson and Art Wadham. Interesting to note, Mr. Wadham stated that in a recent conversation with Neil Adare, publisher of Motor, he stated that the Garage Operators Association of Ontario was the only one of its kind on the North American continent and that he, Mr. Adare, was going to prepare for the fifty thousand readers of Motor an article dealing with the organization.

Mr. Davies, well known ventriloquist of Hamilton gave a very entertaining fifteen minutes. Motion pictures by two well known companies was also enjoyed. The meeting closed with President elect Jack Trudeau assuming the chair and expressing his appreciation for the confidence placed in him by the members.

The Stars Say

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Sunday, February 25

SUNDAY'S horoscope holds auguries that indicate this to be an excellent time for group work for the spiritual benefit and uplift of mankind. Institutional collaboration between civic and ecclesiastical forces should be of benefit under this spur to humane impulses and mystical vision. Write cautiously.

Those whose birthday it is may find their best forces and ambitions will gain fruit by co-operation with others of similar ideas and ideals. Business, hard work and a sagacious insight in major opportunities should spell high success, especially if the handling of writings and documents has been wise.

A child born on this day may have many talents for success and high accomplishments, especially if it will direct its native intuitive or inspirational impressions into practical channels, in collaboration with others.

For Monday, February 26

MONDAY'S astrological forecast is for some rather singular, perplexing and dubious situations. But these may bring progress, success and personal gratifications if cautiously and sagaciously manipulated. It will take shrewd insight and tact, especially with superiors or those having decisions to make.

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared for a year of rather curious or intriguing experiences in which keen insight vigilance and shrewdness may be required to circumvent certain strategics. Unique developments may demand forethought and finesse in handling superiors. Step cautiously all the way.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Sounds Like One of the Gold-Digger Sisterhood

Dear Miss Fairfax,

We've been going together for the past three years, during which time she accepted my proposal of marriage. Last Summer she told me she didn't love me any more and we'd better stop going together. But I love her so much I'm glad to take her out occasionally, though she says if I don't like what she does I can stop seeing her.

She comes of a very poor family who let their bills pile up and have no sense of responsibility. Sometimes I clean up the bills for her. I try to please her, even to the extent of doing things that are distasteful to me. She wants everything her own way, never my way, and gets angry if we don't agree. I've given her until June to make up her mind. Please let me know if there is anything I can do to bring back the happiness which was once ours.

Despondent

I can tell you what to do to bring back your future happiness, though I doubt if you take my suggestion. I'd drop that spoiled young person like the proverbial hot poker. Her family don't pay their bills and you settle for them occasionally. What sort of a clan is that, to marry into?

From what you tell me in your letter, all of which I haven't printed, she seems competent to assume the presidency of the gold-digger sisterhood.

Finds Home is the Best Place After All

Dear Miss Fairfax,

After being married to him for twenty years, my husband left me about three years ago for no reason at all—I never did know why. I have seen him once in that time, but not to talk to, and I understand now that he wants to come back and live with me. He has told friends of mine that he would like to meet me some evening and talk things over with me. Please give me your advice in this matter.

M. O.

As you spent twenty years of your life with your husband you should be able to make up your mind whether you still love him enough to go back to him. There is no telling why men and women do such strange things as leaving their old partners with no word of explanation and so often they make the discovery they were happier with the old mate than whatever caused them to stray—the other woman, greater sense of freedom, or even Wanderlust. But back they come like the cat and it's the wives' province to decide whether they want them back or not.

But after twenty years, I think you might give him another chance.

That Day She Didn't Feel Like Entertaining

Dear Miss Fairfax,

Last year I met my girl friend's brother, and we became attracted to one another. We had a small cottage at the beach, and he used to come down there, and we'd meet on the beach. But I usually asked him up to the house.. One day it was raining, and I guess I wasn't in the entertaining mood. I didn't ask him to come up to the house, and I suppose this hurt him because I haven't seen him since.

Through his boy friend, I invited them both to the house to play cards; they accepted but that was over a month ago and I haven't seen or heard from them. I haven't even gone to my girl friend's house, because I don't want to appear to be running after him. What can I do to regain their friendship?

Betty

Suppose you try another party, Sunday night supper this time, and see if you can't get the boy back on the old pleasant footing. Evidently he doesn't harbor any deep grudge against you, or he wouldn't have accepted your invitation to play cards.

Wonders Where No. 1 Boy Friend Spends His Evenings

Dear Miss Fairfax

My boy friend is in the Army, stationed at Hawaii. I don't expect him to return for two years. I don't know what he might be doing evenings, but when he was home he was very popular. Still, I can't expect him to sit home evenings, for two years, and again I'd hate to wait two years for him and then find out he wasn't coming back to me.

I've met another young man who seems to like me very much, but he seems afraid to tell me. He has mentioned to others that he'd like to go "steady" with me, but the knowledge of this Army friend of mine seems to be holding him back.

Undecided.

I'm afraid it's getting to be a case with you of "absence makes the heart grow fonder" for the other Yellow. And that's really not a crime when one takes into consideration youth and propinquity. Also, if you really care about No. 1 boy friend, try to have a little more faith in him. If he's really in love with you, he's probably spending lonesome evenings instead of having all the fun to be had for the asking, in a place like Hawaii.

I think your problem is one which time alone can settle. But if you do decide you care enough for No. 2 boy friend to become engaged, be honest with No. 1, and write to him to that effect.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Good Mixers

In the mental attitude of a "good mixer" we usually find a subtle secret—that he or she has a vast and gentle disregard of the shortcomings of other people.

"Blessed is he who expects nothing for he shall not be disappointed" is an axiom that is part of the social equipment of a "good mixer", and he or she applies this axiom without actually being aware of doing it.

The human lubricants who make life pleasant are never hypercritical. They take the world as they find it and they find it a good world.

If you are planning to forge ahead in the business or social world, and are about to analyze human relationships, you will, if you are wise in your analysis, conclude that one of your most important foundation stones must be a wide generosity. The sharp, contemptuous, overbearing, discourteous, individual is apt to walk alone!

Plans Shower

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I am seeking information from you as to what would be proper for a stork shower.

The expectant mother has so many friends that it seems impossible for us to have just a regular shower because of lack of room. We thought of having a tea shower but don't know whether it would be the proper thing or not. Please let us know about this.

If it is correct, please let us know about invitations, gifts, a receiving line, if any, and refreshments.

Would it be proper for the hostess and her assistants to wear dinner dresses?

Hostess

I am wondering if these large-scale plans for the stork shower would be acceptable to this mother-to-be. Have you consulted her about them? When a stork shower is given, it is customarily an informal gathering of the most intimate friends of the guest of honour.

In the first place you should be wary of planning a shower at all unless you are sure that the expectant mother will welcome it. And you should most certainly be wary of planning a large tea-party with a receiving line, and with the hostess and her "assistants" in dinner dresses.

It is thoroughly proper for you to have the shower at tea-time—this is, as a matter of fact, the best time of day to give a stork shower. There should be no receiving-line, and the hostess and co-hostesses should wear what their guests or any other woman would wear at a tea-party — day-clothes, street-length.

The invitations for such an informal party might properly be given over the telephone, by cordial little notes, by the hostess' visiting-cards or by simple cards than can be bought at a stationer's.

Among the gifts—the wisest thing is for the hostess or a co-hostess to find out, perhaps from some member of the guest of honor's family, just what items the mother-to-be already has for the baby and what items would be welcomed to complete the list, necessities and luxuries. So often guests planning their gifts for a stork shower are so intrigued with the beauty of bootees and little sacques that they forget that the mother might well get on with fewer of these and appreciate such necessities as plain little slips.

For your tea-menu you might have small sandwiches with assorted fillings, little tea-cakes or layer cake or slices of cake, tea or coffee, or both. Ice cream may be added to this menu, and such accessories as salted nuts and mints or other kinds of candy. Or you may like to serve hot bouillon first (borstch, the easily-made or bought Russian beet soup is a good choice for this, since it is both delicious and gala-looking), or you might like to have your menu more consequential by serving chicken a la King on toast, or chicken salad or fruit salad with hot or heated rolls or small biscuits.

When a hostess enters a room with a guest or enters her house with a guest, she goes first when it is necessary to show the way. But before she does this, she say, "Will you excuse me for going first?", or "Perhaps it would be better if I go first, to light the light", or, "Do you mind if I lead the way upstairs?"

SPRING brings to mind a suit, but many of us refuse to wait on the weather. We fare forth wearing a suit under our fur coat, often with a frilly blouse, to achieve that vernal note. A smart new tailor-made is in gray wool in a basket-weave, the jacket with slanted flap pockets and a double-link fastening at the waistline. As with many other new models, this suit has less padding, making for a more natural shoulder-line. This means finer tailoring at the shoulder, and a better fitting sleeve. The two-color suit is going well, with the scarlet jacket and black skirt cited for special attention.

Today's Menu

By BETSY NEWMAN

Oyster Bisque
Toast Strips, Croutons or Crackers
Broiled Steak with Carrots and Onions
Baked Potatoes
Fresh Vegetable Salad Green Peas
Fig Nut Whip or Chocolate Pie
Coffee

OYSTER BISQUE — Ingredients: one quart oysters, one quart milk, one large tablespoon butter, one teaspoon salt, a pinch of pepper. Boil oysters in their own liquor until gills curl. Strain liquor from oysters and add to milk that has been scalded. Add seasoning and butter and serve in bouillon cups with whipped cream and chopped parsley on top. This amount will serve six or seven.

Broiled Steak — Rub steak with olive oil on both sides before broiling. Broil, then make sauce of one-half lemon, one tablespoon melted butter, one tablespoon chopped parsley, pepper and salt, and pour over it. Serve piping hot and surrounded with carrots and onions that have been sliced or left whole—as you please—boiled until tender in well-salted water then drained and browned lightly in bacon fat or left plain.

Chocolate Pie —Prepare and bake rich pastry shell. The filling requires one cup milk, one-half cup sugar, one tablespoon cornstarch, two or three eggs, two squares bitter chocolate. Melt chocolate, add sugar, cornstarch, eggs, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one teaspoon butter in top of double boiler; mix well. Gradually add one cup milk and cook until thick. Add one teaspoon vanilla. Pour into pie shell, and when cold serve with whipped cream on top.

Fig Nut Whip—Ingredients: one cup dried figs, one package lemon-flavored gelatin, one and three-fourths cups hot water, one-half cup whipping cream, one-half cup chopped nut meats. Rinse figs, boil 30 minutes in water to cover, drain clip stems and cut into small pieces. Pour hot water over gelatin and stir until dissolved; cool. When gelatin begins to set, add whipped cream, figs and nuts, and mix thoroughly. Chill before serving.

Policing the Child Who Steals

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

"DR. GARRY C. MYERS—I wonder whether you could help me with a very serious problem. I read your column every day and find so many helps and good common sense that I am turning to you now when I need help so badly.

"My little boy, aged three and one-half, has gotten into the habit of stealing. He goes into my purse, his daddy's, his grandfather's, his grandmother's and takes the change. We have spanked, pleaded, frightened, scolded—everything that we could think of—to no avail. He has a darling dispostion and all the neighbours love him, so I don't know if he has tried to steal in the neighbors' homes or not. We have caught him times without number in our home and his grandmother's home.

"He sneaks to steal but, if caught, does not seem the least embarrassed, plainly stating that he wished a nickel or a penny for gum, ice cream or candy. My parents and myself and husband have co-operated wonderfully in trying to correct him, but to no avail.

Had Spending Money

"The child has always had a little money to spend (as much as the rest of the children) . . .But his daddy has been out of work and I have had to shut down quite tight. I have explained but do not know how well it has registered.".

How I answered her:

"Your chief trouble is, Mother, that all of you have made this an emotional matter, playing up the act as stealing, and you have thrown temptations in the tot's way beyond what he was able to bear. Plan with the rest of his loved ones to avoid the word, 'steal' or 'stealing'. Don't leave purses lie around promiscuously.

Respect Possessions

"Make clear to the child what things are his and what are yours. Respect his possessions as you would have him respect yours. Treat his touching or handling your purse as you would his handling or touching matches. If you do not catch him until after he has taken the money, do nothing. It's too late then. See that he never has an opportunity to touch the purse without your seeing him and administering immediate pain.

"Don't talk or explain any more. Never try to corner him if you suspect he has taken money. Count it your error and not his. Give him a nickel regularly, say once a week, on a certain day, and no more.

"All of you should read aloud to him and make him feel more secure. Answers all his questions and listen to his talk. Help him to make things from empty cardboard boxes and encourage him to color and draw on wrapping paper. Reduce commands. Show him more affection when he is good. Smile more at him. Make him feel he really is loved. Instead of spanking, assign him to sit on a chair, where you can see him, doing nothing, for exactly 20 minutes.

Solving Parent Problems

Q.—Is it too late to change a child's attitudes and habits after he is five?

A.—Certainly not. Even at your age such change is possible. Otherwise you would not read this column.

Q.—What is the best way to attack the gambling menace to our children?

A.—For all churches to quit raising money by gambling devices and for most parents to quit gambling.

Q.—Should the P.T.A. buy school equipment?

A.—As a rule, no. The big function of the P.T.A. is to promote better parenthood and better home-school relations.

Chicken Pox

No discussion of common infectious diseases in children would be complete without a few words about chicken pox, which is just about the most infectious of them all. Fortunately for the children, for the parents and for we doctors too, it is also the least harmful.

In its more common form, it is just a rash that occurs chiefly on the arms and legs of the child. It starts as a tiny crop of blisters and gradually turns into thick, crusted, sores. Sometimes the trouble hangs on and doesn't clear up easily. The patient remains a source of infection to others for several weeks as crop after crop of blisters appear. Occasionally it reaches a serious stage. Sometimes a bad case of chicken pox is mistaken for smallpox. I myself would prefer a mild case of smallpox to a bad chicken pox any day. The two are likely to be confused by an inexperienced diagnostician.

Chicken pox is disease that goes through a school like lighting, it is is contagious.

It has caused me some embarrassment with the public health nurses in my part of the country. The Red Cross maintains stations at various points and their nurses make regular rounds, giving prenatal care to mothers, examining school children and generally attending the sick. Medical men are scarce in some parts of the sparsely settled region and the area to be covered is so great that the nurses have to do some pinch hitting for me and the other doctors.

In diagnosing and treating cases when a doctor isn't available the nurses make some mistakes. Several times I have been summoned by a nurse to attend a case of smallpox and I have found that it was really chicken pox.

Each time the error placed me in an embarrassing position. I'm not in favor of deceiving a patient or his family about his sickness. Yet in these cases if I declared the nurses's diagnosis wrong, I ran the risk of discrediting her with the family and diminishing the community's faith in her work, to which some of the rough people are hostile by nature anyway. So I usually felt called upon to confirm her diagnosis to the family, and to disagree with her about it privately.

Let me say in passing that these Red Cross nurses do truly indispensible and heroic work in the north woods and other sparsely settled parts of the country. A woman who leaves the comparative comfort of a hospital or private nursing in a city to come out here voluntarily and work under the most primitive conditions is naturally in love with her work and the type who is a credit to the profession. They carry on with all the ardor of Florence Nightingales. My only complaint with them is that too many of them get married and leave the service.

Actually chicken pox is in no way related to smallpox, one does not immunize against the other. Chicken pox nearly always attacks children, and adult cases are rare. Smallpox attacks all ages. Though smallpox is rare these days, the services of a doctor are always desirable in cases of chicken pox, in order that the parents may determine positively that the child's disease is not a form of smallpox.

Easing Work at the Sink

By ELEANOR ROSS

IF A kitchen is to function perfectly, the sink must be right. When you are building or remodeling, have the sink placed and fitted according to your own specifications. The sink should be central to all kitchen activities, not placed in a corner, as is so frequently the case. Elbow room is required for dish washing; one side for stacking used dishes, the other side for draining clean ones.

To find the correct height for a sink, stand erect and at ease, double your hands and let your knuckles rest on the bottom of the sink. In that position you can prove in advance that there will be no need for stooping while washing dishes. Most houseworkers find that 32 inches from the floor of the room to the floor of the sink is the most satisfactory height for the average woman. As to the size of the sink, that should be determined by the amount of household activities.

Good Drain Board

Have a good drain board, if possible of stainless metal. The equipment used for work about the sink should be placed in places convenient to it. There should be ample storage space for soaps, cleansers, polishes, dish towels and cloths in use. There also should be a place for brushes, knives and parers. The coffee and tea pots should be handy. There should be a good back splash board on the sink to protect the wall. If possible, place cabinets above the sink at either side, to hold the utensils and china in current use.

Acquire a stool or chair of the right height for sitting at the sink. If there's a cabinet under the sink, opening the door will generally permit the worker to sit in comfort. Sitting while preparing foods or washing dishes is a great saver of physical energy, making kitchen work much easier.

Proper lighting also is a great factor in conserving physical and nervous energy. The central kitchen lighting fixture is most desirable, since it sheds a soft, diffused glow over the room, but this should be augmented by a special light placed over the sink. One of those pin-it-up lighting fixtures is a good solution, if there is a light outlet nearby, and there should be.

TONY

— BY ELIZABETH VERNON —

CHAPTER VIII

Hyacinth, coming into the hall, saw Tony emerging from the smoking room.

"What were you doing in there?" Her voice was sharp.

"I've been returning my Christmas present to your young man."

Hyacinth stared at her. "I only hope Alan dealt with you."

"Oh, yes; he said a few things. He has decided views, hasn't he? Nice for you when you're married."

Hyacinth glanced down sideways at her young sister. "You oughtn't to be among decent people," she said.

"I never am," Tony replied. She wandered over to the fire and sat down. She would not go upstairs at once, for that might have seemed like a retreat.

Hyacinth opened the piano. Slow, rippling chords rose from the bass and filled the room. Tony closed her eyes for a moment, shutting out the sight of her sister. Again she thought, "How slowly the years pass." Three whole years before she would be of age. They stretched before her filled with gloom—hate—

The door opened. Potter appeared on the threshold. Behind him, silhouetted against the light in the outer hall was a large figure.

"Major Cheaveley!" Potter announced.

For one instant it seemed that Hyacinth had not heard. She continued to play, her eyes fixed before her. Then suddenly in a discord that music ceased. She rose, but still, Tony saw, she did not turn to look at the big men who had entered. And her face—or was it just a trick of the light? was as white as the keys, or as her hands.

"Hullo, Hyacinth!" said Major Cheaveley.

Tony, looking at him, remembered him well. But in his past visits to Oaken he had not much noticed her Nor, it seemed, did he notice her now.

"My dear, how nice to see you!" Hyacinth's hand was in his. Her voice was cordial, but Tony, who had so often felt fear knew fear when she heard it. And in those slightly slurred words it seemed to her that she heard it now. She gazed at her sister. Surely even Hyacinth's smile was a little different, the lips parted widely as she needed breath.

"We—we thought you were still in South America," Hyacinth said.

"Yes. It's a surprise. It surprised me. Truth is, I found I couldn't do much good there. The proposition wasn't what I'd hoped. Shan't make my fortune this time." He laughed. His face was brown-red under the thick black curls of his hair.

There was a tiny pause. "You don't seem too pleased by the surprise," said Major Cheaveley, and his smile was gone.

"But I am, Bob." Hyacinth moved away from the piano. She went to the tray of drinks that stood in a corner. "Of course I'm delighted. Hyacinth's hand hovered above the decanters. Her words came more quickly than usual, as if they were forced from her. "But you won't have heard my news—"

"News? What news?" Bob Cheaveley's eyes suddenly were riveted on her.

"No one knows it yet,". Hyacinth laughed. "I'm engaged to be married, Bob." Her voice was low.

"What?" Bob Cheaveley moved swiftly—so swiftly that Tony drew a quick breath. "You wouldn't dare—" his hand gripped Hyacinth's wrist. A glass fell, smashed, to the floor.

"Bob!"

"So my return was a bit of a shock. Eh?"

"Bob, please!" Hyacinth's glance flashed to Tony, seated so still in her corner.

Bob Cheaveley turned his head. He loosed his hold. Hyacinth's hand fell to her side and Tony could see the angry mark on the white skin.

"Young Tony, eh?" he said. "Well she can run along upstairs."

"Thanks," said Tony.

There was a soft sound in the gallery above. Mrs. Querne's once beautiful face looked over the balustrade.

"Why, Major Cheaveley! What a surprise!" Slowly, she began to descend the stairs.

He had raised his hand in greeting to her, but now he addressed himself to Hyacinth. "We'll have a little talk about this." He didn't trouble to lower his voice. "Do you understand, Hyacinth?"

"Bob, it's no use." Hyacinth whispered. Tony could hardly hear. "It's settled. I would have written to you—"

Mrs. Querne had descended to the hall. "Hyacinth, darling, give me a glass of sherry," she said. "Tony, why are you smoking? You know it's not allowed."

Tony rose, throwing her cigarette into the fire. She smiled a little. She crossed the hall. No one spoke to her again. She was halfway up the stairs when the door of the smoking room opened. Alan Fleming entered. She paused then, gazing down on the group below; on Major Cheaveley—quite old he seemed to her, aged about forty-five, large and burly; and on Alan Fleming, lean and as tall.

There were murmured introductions and, "Alan is my future son-in-law," Mrs. Querne said. She laughed.

Hyacinth said nothing. The two men exchanged glances.

Tony turned and mounted the stairs. She entered the schoolroom. Jacky was seated at the table, her chin on her hands, frowning over a book. She turned quickly.

"Oh, there you are! Did they keep you downstairs?" Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes bright.

"It was rather difficult to get away." Tony didn't explain further. She shut the door, and it seemed to her then that she and Jacky were shut into their own peaceful world as if no other existed.

She glanced at Jacky's untouched supper. "That looks a bit dull. But see what I've got for you." She tugged at her pocket. "I've been carrying it about since luncheon." She opened a piece of paper and laid a mince pie, gold-brown, on Jacky's plate.

"Oh, Tony!" Jacky gazed at it, sparkling. A moment later she looked up at her sister and rather suddenly, Tony saw, that sparkle had died. "You won't be cross if I say something, will you?"

Tony felt a pang. "Silly little goose. Am I often cross?"

"No, no." Jacky seized a fold of Tony's skirt. "You never are. I don't know why I said that." But Tony knew, and knew too what had made Jacky a little timid even of her. Jacky had never been physically bullied, but month after month, year after year, she had lived a disregarded life; and that life, temporarily or permanently, had set its mark on her. "Would you mind awfully," she asked, "if I didn't eat the pie now? I don't feel very hungry."

"Do you feel sick, darling?"

"Well, I almost do. But I'll be all right if I needn't have supper. Could I have the pie for breakfast?"

"Perhaps. But anyway I'll put you straight to bed now. Your paws are rather hot." Tony's brow puckered anxiously. "You must stop in bed tomorrow if you aren't quiet well," she said. And then, as Jacky's face fell, "It's all right, darling. I'll stay with you all day. I'll read to you and we'll play Snakes and Ladders — anything you like. It'll be fun.

"Hurrah!" Jacky began to dance. Then as abruptly she stopped. But Tony was searching now in the old brown-painted corner cupboard. She didn't notice that sudden quiet.

"I'm not going to be ill," Jacky said after a moment. "But if I was, I wouldn't mind a bit with you here, Tony. I'd rather like it, you know."

Tony laughed. "What you like is to be spoilt." Thus she hid the anxiety in her heart.

"I know I do."

"Well, darling," Tony turned, bottle in hand, "you must have some medicine anyway."

"Oh! Is it nasty?"

"No. It's only what old Nanny used to give us." Tony looked at the label. "It says, 'This elegant preparation'—"

"Oh, I don't mind that kind." Jacky watched as, carefully, Tony poured. She took the wine glass. Gravely, she regarded her sister over the rim. "I'm drinking to your happiness, Tony. And confusion and misery to all your enemies—partic'ly Mr. Fleming."

"Thank you, darling," Tony said.

The War This Week

By DON GILBERT

Events pointing to the creation of new fronts gathered momentum in the 25th week of the war between the allied powers and Germany. In either the far north or the middle east, or both, it appeared the allies might be preparing for a great flanking movement against the Reich and its sources of supply in Central Europe.

While the exploit of H.M.S. Cossack in liberating 300 British seamen from the German prison ship Altmark drew attention to Norway's neutrality difficulties, the appearance of British warships off northern Scandinavia indicated Britain intends to stop Germany's use of the Norwegian coastline to run supplies down from Russian Arctic ports.

The possibility of friction with Russia over this development was linked with the growing proportions of allied assistance to the Finns.

The view that Great Britain and France, and their allies, should throw in their lot with the Finns was aired with increasing frequency.

King Supports Decision.

Swedish public clamor for aid to the Finns was so persistent that King Gustaf, declaring he could not take responsibility for his country becoming involved in the struggle between the great powers, took the unusual step of publicly supporting the decision of his cabinet to reject a formal Finnish request for the assistance of Sweden.

Allied pressure on Germany's other flank in southeastern Europe steadily increased. British warships carried contraband control operations almost to the Dardanelles and there was talk of Turkey, non-belligerent ally of Britain and France, allowing allied naval vessels to enter the Black Sea to halt German oil imports from Russia.

Cooling of relations between Turkey and Russia was emphasized when the Soviet government recalled all Russian technicians employed in Turkey. The Red fleet held manoeuvres in the Black Sea and defence measures were speeded in Baku on the Caspian.

Rumania Gets Off Fence

Rumania, called upon by Britain to end her fence-sitting tactics while receiving Allied arms and money and the guarantee of armed help if she is invaded, banned the export of aviation gasoline to Germany and called up new army reserves.

In the west, Britain marked the approaching end of six months of conflict by shooting down several German raiding planes, sinking a few submarines, and welcoming home the heroes of the naval engagement in South American waters which saw the end of the pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee. German sea raiders succeeded however, in sinking some 50,000 tons of merchant shipping, half of it belonging to the neutral Netherlands. H.M.S. Daring, one of the British destroyer fleet of some 200 units, was torpedoes with a loss of 157 lives.

Glancing back 25 years—The first phase of the Gallipoli campaign began February 19, 1915, when British and French warships bombarded forts at the entrance to the Dardanelles. On the western front the Allies attacked, while in the east, German troops penetrated northern Poland from East Prussia.

Belleville Branch of National Young Conservative Association Pledges Dr. Manion Support

Forming a nucleus of a Belleville branch of the National Young Conservative Association, a small but enthusiastic group of the city's young men met at the Conservative Club Rooms last night and pledged their whole-hearted support to the Youth Movement of the National Conservative Party, which is receiving nation-wide attention as one of Dr. Manion's principle planks in the forthcoming Federal election campaign.

Attended by Mr. George Ketcheson of Sidney, Eastern Ontario organizer for the National Young Conservative Movement, the meeting got under way with Mr. Jake Goodman in the chair and Ald. "Derby" Jeffery acting as secretary, Mr. Goodman explained in detail the aims of Dr. Manion's proposal for the solving of youth problems in Canada. It was decided to call the local organization "The National Young Conservatives of the City of Belleville."

Two Resolutions Passed

The following two resolutions were made: (1) "Resolved that the National Young Conservatives of Canada Movement endorse Dr. Manion's nineteen point program, especially with regard to any initial move on the part of the government to setting up therein a ministry responsible for youth welfare. (2) Whereas former governments of this Dominion have neglected the problems peculiar to the young men and women of the country, therefore be it resolved that this organization pledge itself to support the national government in its proposal to establish a separate ministry of the cabinet to be called a 'Ministry of Youth' with the object of solving their problems and giving to the youth of this Dominion the privilege of earning a living, which has been denied them in the past."

As this was but a preliminary meeting there were no officers elected, but a committee was appointed to make a thorough canvass of the city's young people with regards to their attending an open meeting on Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th. Music is being provided for a social time and election of officers will take place.

'Lion Hunting Safari' Tracks Down Quarry and Finds Playful Dane

Pittsburgh, Feb. 24 (AP).—Residents of the thickly-populated Millvale district sighed in relief today as a "lion hunting safari" of police and volunteers tracked down its quarry and found—a playful Great Dane.

For more than sixteen hours the weary searchers scoured the neighborhood after several terrified women told policemen they had seen "a lion".

One woman said she saw "its big blond body, its big head and long tail with a tuft of fur at the end."

Others heard it "roar" and some saw it "slink across the highway".

Albert H. Marzolf, owner of the dog, explained it was never tied up at night because:

"I tied him to a ladder one night and the next day I found him dragging the ladder through a field."

Contraband Control Seizes German Mail

A British tar is shown holding a mailbag destined for Germany which was seized from the American liner S.S. Manhattan by the British contraband control at Gibraltar. All mail consigned to Germany is confiscated. The German government recently ruled that any neutral ship permitting itself to be taken to a British station for examination becomes fair game for Nazi U-boats. Technically this makes it open season on the Manhattan.

Hore-Belisha Urges Support for Finland by 'Sea, Air and Land'

Devonport, England, Feb. 23.—(CP)—Leslie Hore-Belisha, who recently resigned as War Secretary, urged Great Britain and France to support Finland by "sea, air and land" in a speech today to his constituents.

In his first public address since he was dropped from the War Cabinet December 5, Mr. Hore-Belisha declared that the Finns' continued resistance indicated "the might of Russia rests on insecure foundations' and added—

"The risk of helping Finland may be great, but the risk of not helping her may be greater, for this gallant country is fighting not for herself alone; she is holding the pass for civilization."

Mr. Hore-Belisha suggested that if Russia won she would not be satisfied with Finland and would also give Germany advantages in Scandinavia.

"Well-planned, adequate, decisive action now would curtail the duration of the war," he asserted.

New York Mayor Wants to Delay Officials' Retirement

New York, Feb. 24—(AP)—Mayor La Guardia is "looking up the law" to see whether he can delay the retirement of the fire commissioner and nine other department officials until a new — and less generous — pension plan becomes effective.

John McElligott, only man ever to hold the dual office of fire chief and commissioner, told the mayor yesterday he was retiring as chief on a $11,250-a-year pension, equivalent to the salary for both jobs. Then the mayor learned that retirement of the nine other fire officials had been granted by McElligott on pensions of two-thirds and three-fourths pay.

The mayor promptly directed council president Newbold Morris to nullify the retirement and designated deputy fire commissioner Elmer Mustard, native of Elgin, Ont., as acting commissioner and instructed him to rescind the department's retirement orders. "I don't know what the next move will be, he said. "I am looking up the law now. The facts show that they are all allowed to retire, but not with the extra allowances."

He declined to elaborate on "extra allowances."

REFUSING MILITARY AID TO FINLAND, SWEDEN LOOKS TO OWN DEFENCES

Struggling to preserve her neutrality as two wars rage around her, Sweden is turning her eyes towards her own defences as it becomes increasingly apparent that Swedish forces will likely be called upon to take the field of battle in the near future, Swedish troops who guard the northern frontier are shown LEFT, operating a mortar during training in the Arctic circle. This week Russian bombers bombed the Swedish town of Pajala, close to the Finnish frontier. Although numerically small, Sweden's air force is well-equipped and its personnel well trained. Champion Maple Leafs' Lead Belleville Juvenile Loop in Scoring With 41 Points

INDIVIDUAL RECORDS

(Compiled by Ken. J. Colling)

The league champion Maple Leafs were the leading scoring team in the Belleville Juvenile Hockey Association during the initial season of operation, the Leafs scoring 23 goals while but eleven pucks were removed from the Leafian twine. The Black Hawks were second in the scoring with 19 goals, but had 18 scored against them. Then came the Americans with 13 goals and lastly the Canadiens with eight counters to their credit.

Lorne Maracle, of the Black Hawks, wing player, was the league's leading scorer with ten goals and four assists to mass 14 scoring points in seven games played. In two less league games, however, Bruce May of the Maple Leafs, counted seven goals and five assists for a total of 12 scoring points. Stan Reid of Canadiens, Al Kellar of the Americans and J. Langabeer of the Maple Leafs had seven scoring points and Gene Rosebush Black Hawks, six. Ingram, of the Leafs, was the badman of the league serving six penalties, while S. Reid and Kellar followed with four each.

Clarke Leading Goalie

Defensively Ted Clarke of the Maple Leafs, led the loop at kicking out rubber, as only eleven goals were scored against him in six games played. Incidentally the Maple Leafs and the Canadiens played one less league game than the Hawks and Amerks and all average include the league semi-final games. Strangely enough with Clarke leading goalie, the other three net-minders had exactly the same number of goals scored against them throughout the season, Mills, Americans, Thompson, Canadiens and Cook of the Black Hawks having seen the red light flash behind them on 18 different occasions.

41 Scoring Points

Besides scoring the greatest number of goals, the Maple Leafs also had the largest number of assists 18 in but six games. With 23 goals and 18 assists the Leafs total scoring points for the season was 41 points. The Black Hawks were second with 19 goals and ten assists the Americans third with 13 goals and nine assists and the Canadiens last with eight goals and nine assists. The scoring averages were respective to the final league standing.

The league is indebted to Coaches Frank Cunningham, Bill Dennis, Red Reid, Frank Collins, Cliff Howie, as well as referees Don Lee, C. Howie and "Red" Townsend, all of whom gave their services gratis that minor league hockey in Belleville might advance to a position where it may someday prove a valuable cog in the city's sporting fraternity. To Mack Robertson, S. R. Burrows, Billie Hughes, Fred Reid, J. N. Yanover, the Kinsmen and Kiwanis Clubs also is extended gratitude for their financial assistance.

The return game will be played in Picton with the total goals on the round deciding the winner.

The Belleville line-up will include goal, Ted Clarke, defence, McBride, Row, McGuire, and Fitzgibbon, centres, Robertson and Kellar, wings, May, Cronk, Bennett, Barrett, Rosebush, Stan Reid, Vern Goyer and Cook sub goalie.

The Picton Juveniles include—goal, Hart; defence, Whattam and Ackerman; centre, K. Frederick; left wing R. Frederick; right wing, Sargent; subs, Scott, Woodward, Evans, Clapp, Bolton.

Toronto, Feb. 24 (CP).—At stake in the annual meeting of the Canadian Rugby Union today was the national football final, which has become the greatest of outdoor Canadian sports attractions.

Joe Ryan, manager of Winnipeg Dominion champion Blue Bombers, seeks a change in rules to allow a greater zone of interference. The Western Interprovincial Union allows a 10-yard interference zone, while the C.R.U. rules provide for no more than three yards of interference ahead of the scrimmage line. Ryan probably would settle for a five-yard zone.

Two years ago the C.R.U. shelved until 1940 the matter of whether the west should be allowed to continue sending a team to the national final after playing under a different set of rules all season, in violation of the national organization's constitution.

W. C. Foulds, chairman of the rules committee, said that the matter of a change hinges upon the question of whether a greater zone of interference would curtail too greatly the use of the lateral pass—"the essence of the Canadian game".

GLEN ROSS WINS RURAL TITLE BY BEATING 'IRISH'

MANY IN ATTENDANCE

Stirling, Feb. 24 (Special).—The curtain fell on the activities of the Central Hastings Rural Hockey League for 1940 when last night before a record-breaking crowd of howling fans, Glen Ross "Riversides" won the championship from the "Fighting Irish" of Zion Hill, winning the final game of the series by a score of 4-0. Down from the mantel of the Glen Ross club came the coveted Tip Top Trophy, merely to undergo a thorough polishing and then to return to its resting place for another year. Last season the "Riversides" displayed superior strength throughout the playing season to win going away. This year they seemed weak in the opening game but took the next two by good margins. Zion Hill finished third, ousted the Foxboro "Foxes" in the semi-finals and took the first game of the finals before their winning spree was checked. Glen Ross came back strong to take the next two games and the cup. Only one more function remains in the league for this year, a skating party next Tuesday night followed by luncheon to be served in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church and the presentation ceremony.

A Successful Season

Thus drawing to a close one of the most successful seasons enjoyed by the league for some time. Those staunch old timers such as Major Fraser, Lorne Brooks and others who were instrumental in starting rural hockey saw it reach its peak, sink for a couple of years, and now share the delight of the present officials as again it enjoys success after reverting to the original plan of operation.

City Would Like It.

Rural hockey looks pretty good to some of the local city peddlers of the sport too. Officials of adjacent city rinks have journeyed out to watch this stuff and invited the boys to go "cityfied". Why not? They see 300 fans out to a game. Why wouldn't they want to cut in?

The game was of sizzling speed with only two penalties in the entire sixty minutes, but it was no push over for the husky "Riverside" boys. They had the edge in the first and last periods but only the fine efforts of Hagerman in their nets saved them from plenty of goals in the middle period when the "Irish" burned themselves out in a continued power play. The Zionites tore into the Glen Ross zone and stayed there for minutes at a time in this period showering Hagerman with shots from all angles. But the boy was always in the right place giving his best display of the year. He had to be good and he was. Hefty Gerry Pyear opened the scoring on a pass from Martin. Hagerman made two for the winners as the period ended.

The second period was scoreless and in this period Zion simply poured hot rubber at Hagerman and the play remained for the greater part of the period inside the Glen Ross blue line. The crowd was a continual bedlam as the Irish stormed in on Hagerman countless times. The period ended 2-0. Gifford stopped only four shots in this period and Hagerman seventeen.

In the final session Zion Hill began to show signs of wear as they continued their determined drive with every man up. Martin picked up a wild pass and using R. Pyear as a threat drifted Glen Foss' third counter past Gifford. From this point on Glen Ross played for a shutout and made their opponents carry the play to them. The game slowed down considerably until Jack Armstrong broke loose with only two minutes left and scored the fourth goal unassisted. Martin, Hagerman, the two Pyears and Armstrong turned in great games for the winners. For Zion R. Dickey, Bedford, Tummon and Simms went well and Orlie Parks went well on defence with the line of Ketcheson, Brough and Faulkner also looking good.

GOODYEARS AND ST. CATHARINES MUCH THE BEST

Teams Win First Games in Semi-Finals From Port Colborne and Hamilton

GOOD CONTESTS

Sailors Defeated by 3-0 While Hamilton Nosed Out by 5-4 Count

Home clubs got away to a flying start last night in the first games of the best-of-five series to decide a finalist in the O.H.A. senior playdowns.

Toronto Goodyears, the defending champions and leaders at the end of the current schedule, blanked Port Colborne Sailors 3-0 at Toronto. Playing at home St. Catharines edged out Hamilton 5-4. Second games will be played on the defeated teams' rinks on Monday.

Sailors held Toronto scoreless during the first period. The game became peppery in the second and George Imlach converted one of the few Toronto scoring opportunities in the early minutes. Ports attacked furiously in the third but left an opening for Bobby Laurent to ram home a loose puck. The Sailors maintained the pressure after this setback but failed to stop Shorty Robinson on a breakaway.

Hamilton Scares St. Kitts.

Pinder took advantage of a miscue by the Hamilton defence halfway through the first period, to put the Saints ahead. In the last two minutes however, Miocinovic and McLeod rammed home a goal apiece to send the visitors in front.

Conick shot Hamilton into a two-goal lead at the three-quarter mark of the second period but Mocha reduced the margin a few seconds later. Penalties hurt the Hamilton cause in the last chapter. Rudy Pilous tied the score while the visitors were shorthanded and shortly after a penalty gave the Saints a chance to slash home two markers by Rombough and Boyd. With this margin to work on the winners dropped back to defensive play and Hamilton was quick to take advantage of the chance to bore in on the Saints' net. Barlow brought Hamilton to within one counter of a tie but with less than a minute to play Saints managed to maintain their slim advantage to the end.

Ki-Y League

The St. Mike's entrant in the local Ki-Y Midget Hockey series won over the O.S.D. lads 3-1 at the Hume Arena yesterday afternoon, while in a second game, Bantam Series, the "Our Gang" pucksters shut the St. Mike's team out 3-0.

After spotting the O.S.D. lads a one-goal advantage in the first period of the first game the St. Mike's team came back fast in the second canto to take a 2-1 lead and then ended another for good measure in the final period.

The "Our Gang" pucksters proved too much for the St. Mike's Bantam team however and a goal in each of the three periods resulted in a 3-0 win.

The teams:

O.S.D.—Goal, Martin; defence, Wilson and Luzon; centre, Calder; wings, Steenburgh and Style; subs, Wedge.

St. Mike's—Goal, Whalen; defence Peets and Callaghan; centre, Wardhaugh; wings, Barrett and Forrester; subs, Moher, Green, Meagher and Temple.

Referee—"Lum" Carson.

St. Mike's—Goal, Galbraith; defence, Upper and Whalen; centre, Boyle; wings, Briand and Bone; sub, O'Brien.

Referee—Claude Mulholland.

KINGSTON RINK IN FINAL MATCH FOR SEAGRAM CUP

Ontario Bonspiel Reaches Closing Stage After Week of Gruelling Competition

FINALS TODAY

Dan Kelly's Rink Has Best Chance to Win Grand Aggregate Honors

Toronto, Feb. 24—(CP)— There were no defending champions among the finalists as the Ontario bonspiel reached the closing stage today after a week of gruelling competition. Only quartet which might repeat a title-winning performance was Dan Kelly's Toronto Granite rink, 1939 grand aggregate winners.

Kelly's stanemen lost a Birks-Ellis-Ryrie semi-final last night 8-11 to C. R. Redfern's Toronto Curling Club four but their record of 11 wins and two defeats still led the possible aggregate winners. A. R. Tarlton of Hamilton and O. T. Dudley of Toronto Curling Club were the only skips with a chance to overtake Kelly. Tarlton has compiled 10 victories against two losses and Dudley nine wins, two defeats.

Gordon Campbell of Hamilton Thistles and Percy Skitch of Lindsay gained the finals of the Seiberling event last night. Campbell defeated Dudley 13-4 while his clubmate, Tarlton, lost to Skitch 8-9.

Redfern Meets Sarjeants

Redfern will meet Stan Sarjeant's Orillia quartet in the finals of the Birks-Ellis-Ryrie competition. Sarjeant doubled the score on C. F. Mason's Toronto Granites, winning 12-6 in the semi-finals.

The Seiberling and Birks-Ellis-Ryrie trophies are offered for winners of first round play in the Royal York event while the losers fight it out for the North American Life and Seagram awards.

Four rinks remain in the hunt for the Royal York trophy, most coveted title at the curling classic. They are piloted by Tarlton, Kelly, Dudley and D. H. Storms of Toronto Granites. H. H. Chisholm, only previous Royal York winner in the quarter-finals, was eliminated by Storms 11-2. Chisholm won in 1929.

Alex Hayes of Sarnia, winner last year, failed to get past the first round Monday, losing to Earl Wheeler 5-13.

The North American Life final brings together two rinks from the Toronto High Park Curling Club, skipped by Dr. C. L. Eaton and Harvey Sproule. Eaton advanced by nosing out R. H. Howard's Toronto Granites and Sproule edged Col. W. O. Morris of Toronto Curling Club 11-10.

Dubbed "International Rink"

Frank White's Bala Stanemen and H. A. Heagle's Kingston rink meet in the Seagram final. White defeated Morris 12-11 and Heagle won from A. E. Stephenson of New Liskeard 10-7. Dubbed the "International Rink" by other curlers, Stephenson's rink was composed of Robert Mews of Milwaukee, lead, J. C. Dempster of Toronto, second, Sam Armstrong of Stouffville, third, and Stephenson, skip.

Bert Kennedy and George Barber, clubmates at the Toronto Royal Canadian Curling Club, come together in the Canada Dry final. Kennedy scored an extra-end win over J. M. Rothschild of Toronto Curling Club 13-12 and Barber eliminated an Oshawa rink led by F. R. Michael 14-13.

The Canada Dry trophy is put up for competition among rinks losing three times without winning more than once in any competition.

U. S. Amateur Athletic Union Track Meet May See Records Broken

New York, Feb. 24 (CP).—A new king of the milers may be crowned in the United States Amateur Athletic Union track and field meet at Madison Square Garden tonight.

Chuck Fenske, winner of five straight invitation mile races, who displaced the immortal Glen Cunningham as "king of the milers", is favored to repeat in the Amateur Athletic Union mile fixture. The same four foes that have been biting his dust so far this season will toe the line with him—Lou Zamperini, Cunningham, Gene Venske and Archie San Romani.

Cunningham is the defending champion, having won the title four times in six starts. Venske has won it twice and Sam Romani once.

Canada's leading track stars — Larry O'Connor of the University of Toronto and Bill Fritz of Queen's University, who have been right up among the leaders so far this season, will run in their specialties.

O'Connor, a sprint star, will compete in the 70-yard hurdles.

Fritz will attempt to crack the jinx that has followed him so far this year. He is entered in the 600-yard run. Charley Beetham, indoor 600 champion and New York University's negro star, and Jim Herbert, who has been taking the play away from Fritz in several races, are co-favorites.

BADMINTON ACE IN EXHIBITION AT LOCAL "Y"

George Goodwin, Jr. World's Pro. Champion Knows All Angles of Game

ONCE DEFEATED

With Angus McFee Lost in Doubles Match Against Martin and Purkis

George Goodwin Jr., world's professional badminton champion, tasted defeat at the Y.M.C.A. courts last evening in an exhibition doubles match, when he was teamed with Angus McFee, of this city when Goodwin and McFee lost to Bob Martin, Belleville, and Jack Purkis, Montreal by the score of 15-8, 9-15 and 15-13. A complete night's program of badminton was presented and sponsored by Homer Townsend, proprietor of Townsend's Sport store, of this city.

However, in the feature presentation of the night, Goodwin showed his true championship ability when he beat Jack Purkis, Montreal, 15-4 and 15-7 in a singles match. Goodwin won the world's professional badminton championship in New York City last spring when he defeated Bill Markham, New York, after Markham had eliminated the previous titleholder, Jack Purcell, Toronto, in the tournament semi-finals. Goodwin displayed splendid form, especially in the return of net birds and received the ovation of some one hundred local badminton fans, who were present to witness the matches.

In the mixed doubles played Miss Grace Burt, of this city, teamed with Mr. Goodwin to win 15-7 and 15-8 over Miss Mary Roberts, Belleville and Mr. Purkis. A men's doubles match played between local players saw Frank Panter and Russ Hachborn defeat Bob Martin and Harold Vaughan 16-14.

Goodwin and Purkis were sent to Belleville by the Slazenger Company.

UNIVERSITIES PREPARE FOR WARTIME TILT

Cambridge and Oxford Race Will be Held Over Shortened Course March 2

A NEW COX

Hart Massey, Lightweight Cox, for Oxford, Will Not be in Boat

By JACK BRAYLEY

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Henley-on-Thames, England, Feb. 24—(CP Cable)—Again risking their fortunes with an unorthodox Canadian cox, Oxford University is preparing for the wartime university boatrace with Cambridge, to be rowed over a shortened course here March 2.

Last year with a boatload of veterans pulling long and powerful sweeps, and with 72-pound Hart Massey of Toronto pulling skillful ropes, the dark blues created such an impression in rehearsal that they were conceded an easy victory.

They were so confident that they gave Cambridge a favorable position after winning the toss and then prostrated their supporters by rowing at the tail of the procession.

A former student of Upper Canada College, son of High Commissioner Vincent Massey, Hart Massey was the lightest cox in the race's history. This year his bouncing seat will be weighed down by 134 pounds of Henry D. Hicks of Bridgetown, N. S. probably the heaviest cox in history. An average cox weighs 112 pounds.

Hart Massey had more brawn for bending his blades than his successor, whose charges are giving away 24 pounds to their rivals, the comparative totals being 1,464 to 1,440.

Oxford is hoping that history will repeat itself. The eights will be returning to the course where Oxford won the original boat race in 1829. But the course has been extended beyond the usual Royal Henley finish, making the route nearly two miles long.

This is far short, however, of the 4 1-2 miles Thames course where the race is usually staged.

Ambers Gives Davis Real Boxing Lesson

New York, Feb. 24 (AP)—Al Davis said today he is ready for a short course in the art of self defence, the decision being reached after 10 rounds of shadow boxing last night with Lou Ambers.

The Brooklyn toughie whose booming left hook had carried him through by professional bouts without defeat got a thorough going over from the lightweight champion in an overweight match. Ambers gave a marvelous exhibition of ring craft in taking the unanimous decision.

In the early rounds, Davis' stout left landed hard and often on Ambers' lantern jaw and lean body. Ambers weathered the storm, and in so doing, perfected a defence which in the last six rounds kept Davis befuddled and tied his left hand as effectively as if it were bound with baling wire. Ambers won going away. Ambers weighed 139, and Davis 146 1-2.

High-Scoring Forward Line Of Schmidt, Bauer, Dumart Ready for Leafs at Garden

(By Jack Calder, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Feb. 24—(CP) — Hockey's highest-scoring forward line, the Sauerkraut Kids, came to Toronto today from their home at Kitchener, Ont. with the idea of putting Boston Bruins into undisputed possession of first place in the National League.

There is good reason to believe, too, that the Krauts can do it in their renewal of the Bruins' ancient rivalry with the third-place Maple Leafs. On Tuesday, they accounted for four goals as their club continued its headlong rush with a 5-0 victory over Toronto at Boston in one of the season's most magnificent power-house displays.

A Remarkable Story

Here is one of sport's most remarkable stories — that Milt Schmidt, Bobby Bauer and Woody Dumart should come from one community and excel as a unit in the fastest game of all. For human interest, it ranks beside the achievement of Lester Patrick in helping his sons, Lynn and Murray to become stars with his New York Rangers.

Schmidt, Bauer and Dumart went home to Kitchener for a brief vacation after Tuesday's triumph and that hockey hive threw open its arms. Schmidt reported to his folks with the N.H.L. scoring championship almost in his grasp, while Dumart and Bauer are running third and fourth.

Bauer, who is 25 and the eldest and smallest, is the leader and chief conspirator of the three. They live, eat and go out together and when a decision is to be made Bauer's opinion is the one that counts.

"There's never a fight," he explains. "Sometimes we talk hockey for hours after a game, discussing this play and that, and deciding what we should do under similar circumstances another time. We'll quit a card game right in the middle when someone thinks of a play that might click on the ice."

Bauer is being boosted in Boston for the Lady Byng award, which goes annually to the N.H.L. player, who best combines playing ability and sportsmanship. He can talk on any subject and he's about the best prospect for an eventual coaching job in the entire league.

Thinks Quickly

He thinks quickly and speaks plausibly. For instance, Captain Red Horner of the Leafs remarked on the train the other night that the season seemed to be going quickly.

"Yes, it does," Bauer said. "I think that's because of the war. It used to be that we would turn to the sports pages first thing when the newspapers came and all we ever thought of was hockey. The game dragged a little. Now everyone has to think of the war and our minds are taken from hockey to a certain extent."

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with Ken J. Colling

Not long ago Peterboro sport scribe, Cec Perdue, told his readers a story, which was supposed to originate in Belleville nearly 20 years ago. But, as usual the Liftlock City scribe failed to corroborate his facts, which he said were told to him by Mike Rodden, veteran hockey referee. It seems Mike told Perdue about the night the late Lou Marsh was mobbed in the old Arnott Arena and later tossed into the local hoose-gow. Perdue added that Mike Rodden refereed the next game here that season and as Rodden showed a distinct facial resemblance to the late Lou E., Perdue said the Belleville fans mistook Rodden for Marsh and resumed their attacks upon Rodden, much to the latter's amusement.

However, the truth of the matter is that the night Lou Marsh was attacked here in Belleville saw the elimination of the Belleville intermediates at the hands of Collingwood and there was no more hockey played here that winter, so how could Rodden have been mistaken for Marsh at a subsequent date that season? The story has been repeated many times in Belleville, however. It was about the year 1922, the Belleville intermediates had won the O.H.A. honors in Eastern Ontario. Next they met Toronto Varsity in a home and home series; the first game was played in Belleville with about an inch of pure water floating around the Arnett rink surface. Belleville won and returned to Toronto, where Goalie Pat Boland was the star of the game as Belleville won the round and were ordered to continue to Collingwood to play on the following Monday.

In the meantime the late Lou Marsh had ridden to the "shipbuilding town" along with the locals and on the trip gave the boys an odd lesson on how to play poker. Now comes the sad part, Collingwood, with old Dad Fryer, Fallis and others, beat the locals something like 8 to 1, Vern Weir scoring the lone Belleville tally. Remembering how Pat Boland had starred with his sensational goalkeeping against Varsity, Lou penned an article in his "Pick and Shovel" sports column of the Toronto Star, that belittled Boland in these words—"from hero to hobo in 48 hours — Pat Boland, Belleville's veteran goalie." Of course Marsh compared the Varsity and Collingwood scores.

However, the Belleville fans and players took exception to Lou's crack and when he appeared here to referee the second game Lou was afforded a real Bronx reception and then when the Collingwood team played the locals to a 4-4 tie and won the round, which was the semi-final that year, the irritated fans really swarmed Lou and during the melee around the entrance to the late Dick Arnott's Arena office, where Marsh changed his shoes, some person tore Sergeant Frank Naphin's overcoat completely up the back, splitting it in two equal parts. The officer was assisting Marsh to his room. The game was played on a Friday night and Lou Marsh stopped off here en route to Montreal, where he was to referee a N.H.L. game Saturday.

However, when Lou went to board the midnight train here he became engaged in an argument with the train officials, which resulted in his subsequently being escorted to the local "hoose-gow." However, the next day Lou proved he was a good sport and in his "Pick and Shovel" column he ran a crack about himself, that went somethink like this—"From rink to clink in four hours," which was something along the lines of a reprisal for his crack at Pat Boland. So, with hockey all through for that year, Mike Rodden couldn't and didn't referee following Lou into town. But it still makes a good story as Mike did resemble the late Lou E. Marsh in facial appearance and both were tops when it came to enforcing the courage of their convictions as hockey officials.

P. S.—We've made no mention of the empty liquor bottle that was thrown from the gallery at Lou and narrowly missed Stan Hagerman, that night, however.

So it's away with this ancient history and let's get modern, "in the groove and on the beam." There is still a ray of hockey hope in Belleville. The local juvenile team has been drawn in the Ontario Juvenile Hockey Association playdowns against Picton in the first round with the first game of the series scheduled to be played at the Hume Arena Monday night. Goals count on the round and the local kids will have to step out and show their mettle, as the Picton kids stepped right into Wellington and won their play-off 6-2. Secretary Red Townsend today informed us that Vernon Goyer had been added to the local roster as Lorne Maracle was found to be over-age. Two years ago Belleville hockey fans saw some splendid juvenile games and there is no reason why this year's brand of teen-aged hockey should not be equally as good. The kids are all Belleville boys and deserve support in their efforts.

Police Blotter

Only two arrests have been necessary in Belleville during the last four days of this week, both persons falling afoul of the law when apprehended on minor charges of the Liquor Control Act. Fines were paid in police court in each case.

Shortly after midnight last night George Davies, of the fifth concession of Thurlow, informed Sergeant Arthur Booth that his wife had left home earlier in the day and had failed to return. A description of the woman was given police but subsequent searchings on the part of the Belleville constabulary failed to reveal any whereabouts of the missing person.

Ten weary "knights of the road" were satisfied to sleep on the bare boards, but under warm surroundings, in the police station cell block last night.

THOUGHT MAN WAS JANITOR

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Feb. 24 (AP) —A thief walked calmly into Our Lady of Lebanon Church and ripped the poor collection box from the wall in the presence of several parishioners. Later they told police they thought the culprit was the janitor making repairs.

Johnny Paycheck Returns to N. Y. But in Style

By EARL HILLIGAN

(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Chicago, Feb. 24 (CP).—Four years ago a kid by the name of Johnny Pacek went to New York for the first time.

He stayed three months, during which he got $25 for fighting a four-round preliminary match, pawned his Golden Gloves ring, sold his topcoat to keep the wolf from the door and finally wired a sister for bus fare to bring him back to Chicago.

Within two weeks the same young man—he spells it Paychek now—will return to New York in a style to which he is having a difficult and pleasant time becoming accustomed. He will fight Joe Louis for the world's heavyweight championship March 29 at Madison Square Garden, probably before 20,000 who'll pay some $100,000. Johnny Paychek, after a long, hocky time of it, has finally hit the jackpot—and he's tickled to death.

"This is what I've been waiting for," smiled the tall, baldish heavyweight, adding: "I think I've got a chance to win. I'll do my best. I'll be going back to New York a second time. It wasn't so good to me four years ago but I've a hunch it'll be better next month."

The record shows he's won thirty-three straight bouts, twenty-three by knockouts. He's 25 and began fighting as an amateur in 1932, winning the heavyweight Golden Gloves crown in 1933.

Paychek turned pro early in 1934. Two defeats came just before illness forced him from the ring in 1936. Sick and discouraged he went to work on a farm and then made the move that started his rise. He adopted Des Moines, Ia., as his home, changed the spelling of his name, went to work as a bell hop and promptly smashed his way into the heart of corn belt fight fans. He's been climbing since.

In the construction of a Bren gun, now supplied the English army, containing 172 parts which require 3,174 separate operations to produce 4,987 different gauges are employed.

Trenton Kids See Four-Goal Lead Whittled Down Before Their Eyes

Trenton, Feb. 24 —(Special)— After gaining a four-goal lead early in the middle session, the Trenton Rotarians saw their advantage fade in the last half when the Lansdowne juniors gained a 5-5 tie with the local juniors in the first round junior "C" play-offs here last night. The return game, with goals to count on the round, will be played in Lansdowne next week, when the teams resume hostilities on even terms. The largest crowd of the season, well over 600, witnessed the game.

The teams played even as Greenham and Burtt scored in the initial session, but before eight minutes had elapsed in the second period Trenton had scored four more and were leading 5-1 before the visitors became organized and retaliated with two belated counters. The Burtt-coached homesters became disorganized in the last session only to have Lansdowne take advantage and score twice to knot the count. McCleary, Greenham and Lafferty locked the best for the visitors, while Inglis, Reid and Burtt carried the mail for the home team.

The line-ups: Trenton—goal, Frost;; defence, Burtt and Orser centre, Inglis; wings, Watson and Reid; subs., Campbell. White, Weller and McColl. Lansdowne — goal, Ellen; defence, Yates and Peck; centre, McClary; wings, Dougall and Lafferty; subs., R. Greenham, Merwell, MacDonald, Trusdale, H. Greenham and Goff.

CORNWALL FLIERS MAKE PLAYOFFS

Collect Point by Holding Concordias to Scoreless Draw

Montreal, Feb. 24—(CP)—Two rousing series, with almost anything likely to happen in either, are in store for Quebec senior hockey league fans when the playoffs start next week.

Final positions of the teams were decided last night when Montreal Concordia and Cornwall Flyers played a scoreless draw. Montreal Royals are assured of first place, Concordia are second, Verdun Maple Leafs third and the Flyers fourth.

According to play-off arrangements Royals and Cornwall will meet in one half of the draw and Concordia and Verdun in the other with the winners qualifying for the league final. Royals still rule slight favorites for the crown but any of the other teams is capable of springing an upset.

Flyers, noted for their high scoring tactics, showed last night that they are also pretty good on the defence. It was the first shutout of the season for both teams and was an indication of just how evenly matched the clubs are in the Q.S.H.L.

By gaining a point, Cornwall ended any hopes Ottawa Senators held of reaching the playoffs. Senators still have a game to play but are three points behind the Flyers, just too far away to stand a chance of gaining a playoff spot.

Repeat Honeymoon

By EVELYN VOSS WISE

Betsy turned for a last fleeting glance at Roel before ascending the wide ivory staircase. That was the way she would always remember him, she thought, his long legs stretched before him, his firm fingers grasping the arms of the chair and his head resting thoughtfully between the wings. She had expected him to make more of a fight to be angry or excited when she told him of her decision to divorce him. Yet she might have known he would be like this. She brushed unexpected tears from her eyes.

"Rachel."

"Ye, Mrs. Colby."

"Will you help me dress now?"

Betsy seated herself before the blue-satin and gold dressing table. It was kind of Helen to lend her house and Rachel. Helen, who on her third trip to Reno must know what Betsy was experiencing.

She had believed that when Roel was told, a distressing situation would be over. After the divorce she and Robert Peel would go quietly to Greenwich and be married.

"I can see why women get divorces, but if they're goin' to do it, it should be right away. You can't live with a person for a long time without having the break hurt," said Rachel.

"I've been married five years, is that too long?"

Rachel nodded eagerly. "I've been on three honeymoons, so I know what I'm talking about. I couldn't stand another one. The first honeymoon was in France. A little cottage on the Brittany coast. A fishing village. That marriage should have lasted. There was everything for happiness, not too much money, but plenty. Love—it seemed enough for a lifetime."

Rachel slipped the dress over Betsy's head. "The second marriage came easier. Not much love—a respect for power and wealth."

Betsy shuddered. Robert had both of these—but she loved him, too. Not as she had Roel. That sort of love came only once in a lifetime.

She arranged the silver skirt in soft lines over Betsy's hips. "Even divorce can become a habit. Where there are no children and the first of youth is gone—" Rachel shrugged indifferently, "there isn't much left in life for excitement."

For a full moment Besty gazed into Rachel's face, then picked up her wrap and gloves. Without so much as a glance into the mirror she fled down the stairs, not at all poised and serene as she had visioned herself earlier, but flushed and unhappy. She would telephone, she must find Roel.

A tall figure was in the doorway. Her heart sank. First of all she must talk to Roel.

"Betsy," he said softly.

"You?" she asked inanely.

"Yes." Roel looked down on her, his heart in his eyes

"My knees refused to move. I just sat on—thinking Betsy—couldn't we try again?"

"When the first of youth is gone and there are no children," Rachel had said Betsy felt tears flooding her eyes. Roel's dear strong arms were holding her gently but firmly.

A gray-haired woman listened from the stairway.

"Well," she said grimly. "That's settled. Miss Helen would have insisted I go with her. I said I couldn't stand another honeymoon, and I can't. But, dear God, instead of Miss Helen having three, just one of them might have been mine."

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, Feb. 24—(CP)—Slightly firmer prices ruled on the Toronto exchange in the final session of the week but there was no improvement in the trading tempo, only about 150,000 shares changing hands in the two-hour session.

Cochenour Willans was in active demand with the price firming 2 cents to 70. Bidgood-Kirkland also moved in considerable quantity on a minor price advance. Other fairly active and firmer juniors were Partanen, Sudbury Contact and God's Lake. Gains of a few cents were netted by Pioneer, Aunor, Preston, Malartic Gold Fields and Beattie, Lamaque advanced 30 cents to 6.70.

Turnover was substantial in Steep Rock with the price holding steady around 2.58.

Only minor changes appeared in the industrial list. Steels, papers, senior oils and foods posted changes in minimum fractions.

COMMUNICATION WITH TURKEY NOT RESTORED

Peak of Excitement Reached in Athens and Belgrade Over Rumors

RIVERS OVERFLOW

Budapest Feb. 24 (AP)—Telephone communication with Turkey, broken "somewhere in Turkey", Thursday ,still had not been restored by mid-morning today.

Telegrams were received yesterday from Istanbul, however, and advices from there last night said that snow and high winds had made both telephone and telegraph communications spasmodic.

As the period of rupture in the telephone system lengthened, a fever of speculation seized southeastern Europeans.

The peak of excitement was reached in Athens and Belgrade where citizens gathered on street corners discussed rumors of "Turkey's general mobilization," only one of the many rumors sweeping southeastern Europe. There was, however, no confirmation of such reports in official quarters.

Advices from Turkey meanwhile told of even more troubles on top of recurring earthquakes and cold. Following torrential rains in southern Antolia, the river Seysan overflowed its banks, inundating large cotton areas and threatening to engulf a town.

FRANCE DECREES ECONOMIC MEASURES

Paris, Feb. 24 (AP)—The French Cabinet in its second session in three days today considered a series of decrees providing for urgent economic measures.

An announcement following the meeting said the decrees would be submitted for final approval to the Council of Ministers—the Cabinet meeting with President Albert Lebrun—probably next Wednesday.

Details of the decrees were not disclosed.

Today's session was attended by Daniel Serruys, High Commissioner of National Economy.

HEAVY SNOWFALL SEEN IN DISTRICT

With a considerable drop in temperature being evident since yesterday, citizens were greeted with the return of winter weather this morning as white snowy flakes drifted earthwards in a typical February snowfall. Indications that "Old Man Winter", was still a long way from being licked were noticed as farmers from the district arrived in town to attend market dressed in fur coats and mufflers.

FISH NOT RUNNING IN BAY OF QUINTE

The fish are not just running at the present time report local fishermen whose occupation it is to coax members of the finny tribe from their safe haven of retreat far beneath the ice of the Bay of Quinte.

"We always manage to net a few mudcats however, and we caught a number of real nice pike this week," stated one market vendor this morning as she wished for warmer weather and the start of the fishing season.

SWEDISH RIKSDAG CALLED TO MEET

Proposed to Place All Imports and Exports of Foreign Exchange Under Control of Central Bank

Stockholm, Feb. 24 (AP).—A proposal to place all imports and exports of foreign exchange in Sweden under control of a central bank will be discussed at a special meeting of the Riksdag (parliament) tomorrow, an official communique announced today.

Under the proposed set-up, imports of Swedish and foreign securities, except through a central bank or designated foreign exchange banks, would be prohibited.

The program, it was explained, would not affect clearing arrangements with Germany, Italy, Turkey and Estonia, nor payment arrangements with Spain.

It was presumed the Riksdag also would discuss Wednesday's bombing of the Swedish border town of Pajala, which the government attributed to Russian planes, but the communique did not allude to this matter.

Political circles here regard the Russian denial, issued last night by Tass, Soviet News Agency, as a matter of the utmost seriousness, holding Sweden's national prestige is directly involved.

Sweden has protested formally to the Kremlin against the raid and the Russian denial is considered tantamount to ignoring the protest. Political circles said that if Russia fails to give Sweden satisfaction, diplomatic relations between the two nations will be endangered.

Better Trading on Butter Market

Toronto, Feb. 24—More inquiry steadied butter prices on the Toronto open produce market yesterday as activity slowed down in eggs.

A slight pick-up in trading was sufficient to move the light arrivals of fresh receipts on the butter market. Less selling pressure was evident and offerings of first grade Ontario solids at 25 3-4c were limited. Western butter sold in morning trading at 25 3-4c per pound, with later business transacted at 26c.

Buying tapered on the egg market, but prices held fairly steady. A firm tone has been maintained throughout the entire week in view of lighter supplies. Consumer demand was reported as good. Shipments to Northern Ontario points continued small, but two cars went forward to the Maritimes.

Youth Plays Command Performance On Player Piano

(By Sam Robertson Canadian Press Staff Writer).

London, Feb. 23 (CP Cable) — Signaller Cecil G. Wood of Kington, Ont., cannot play a note of music on any instrument but he turned in a successful "command performance" at the piano for the Qu'een.

The younger member of the Canadian Active Service Force was pumping away merrily at a player piano in one of the Beaver Club's recreation rooms during Her Majesty's informal visit when the Royal party walked in on Cecil and his attentive audience.

There was an immediate silence until the smiling Queen walked over to the piano and said to the blushing youth, "please go on and play."

After listening for a while, Her Majesty asked, "what are you playing?"

"I'm sorry I don't know," Cecil stammered.

Laughingly the Queen said that if the music roll were unreeled they could find out. It turned out to be "Valse of the Roses."

COUNTY CLERK GIVEN PROMOTION

County Clerk Erle Denyes of Hastings, received signal honor at the convention of the Ontario Association of Rural Municipalities held in the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, this week, when he was appointed first vice-president of the organization.

Mr. Denyes had served on the directorate for some time and has enjoyed the widespread popularity of his colleagues both during his tenure as an official and as a delegate prior to his elevation to an official capacity.

SAVINGS CERTIFICATES POPULAR IN BRITAIN

Birmingham, Feb. 24 (C.P. Cable) —Prime Minister Chamberlain in his speech here today announced that £92,000,000 ($409,400,000) has been subscribed in national savings certificates and defence bonds in the 13 weeks since the war savings campaign was inaugurated.

MANION CLAIMS KING GOV'T IN

at short range, said Senator Griesbach declaring this was a result of the government's policy of a middle course policy of doing more than nothing but less than all, a policy of "limited liability."

Criticizing a reported statement of Agriculture Minister Gardiner that National Government is contrary to democracy, and associated with scandals. Dr. Manion said the United Kingdom's present National Government is the best possible argument for a National Government in Canada.

Britain was the greatest and truest democracy in the world and no taint of scandal had ever soiled its pages.

A National Government would have the duty of carrying out a whole-hearted effort during the war and of laying plans for the post-war period and he contended a one-party government could not avoid politics, favoritism and extravagance whereas a National Government could.

Powers Waning Says Manion

Prime Minister Mackenzie has remained in power "more by astuteness than administrative ability," Dr. Manion continued, but "his powers of astuteness were waning."

He declared the Liberal Leader had repudiated his lifetime preachings about his belief in the supremacy of Parliament by scuttling Parliament and trying to get a snap decision from the people before they had a chance to learn the real facts of that government's "complete failure" in peace and war.

The Conservative Leader charged Mr. Mackenzie King with "gagging" Parliament and charged that although the Liberal Government between 1935 and the outbreak of war had spent $188,000,000 "supposedly on defence," there was "no defence or preparation for it when the war burst upon us."

The Liberal Government had been "wrong both ways" in moving Hon. Ian Mackenzie from the Defence to Pensions Department following the Bren gun probe, he said. If Mr. Mackenzie had been right in his handling of the Bren gun contracts, he should have continued as Defence Minister, but he was wrong, he should not have remained in the government, Dr. Manion contended.

Out of Touch.

Dr. Manion said Prime Minister Mackenzie King was out of touch with the realities of what was going on. Instead of visiting the various sections of the country ,the prime minister stayed at his country home across the Ottawa river from Ontario in Quebec.

"What did the government do with that $188,000,000 supposedly spent on defence since 1935? I don't know and I don't think they know."

He attacked the government for its treatment of mothers of enlisted men. A country was not fit to fight for which would take boys to risk their lives and leave their mothers uncared for. However, that was not the will of the country but the stupidity of the government. Dr. Manion read letters of protest in this connection from St. Thomas, Ont., and Verdun, Que.

Attacks Gun Contract.

Attacking the Liberal government in connection with the Bren gun contracts, Dr. Manion said Mr. Justice H. H. Davis in his report on the Bren gun probe had condemned every phase of the contracts except that there was no "personal corruption".

The Conservative leader declared the Liberal government was "wrong both ways" in moving Hon. Ian Mackenzie froom the Defence to the Pensions Department. If Mr. Mackenzie had handled the Bren gun contracts correctly, he should have remained as defence minister. If he was wrong, he should not have remained in the government, Dr. Manion asserted.

"Anyway, Mr. Mackenzie is certainly as good as Rogers." (Hon. Norman Rogers who succeeded Mr. Mackenzie as Defence Minister).

HALT SINKINGS OF SHIPS OBJECT

wegian, Swedish and Danish ships by submarine and mine action. The three countries already have lost more than fifty ships totalling about 160,000 tons with a loss of 600 lives.

2—Settlement of the Altmark incident in which British warships seized 299 British Seamen imprisoned on a Nazi ship close to Norway's shore.

3—Bombing of the Swedish town of Pjala near the Finnish border. Sweden said Russian planes did the bombing; Russia has denied it.

Norwegian Ships Sunk

The conferenc eof the three Ministers is their second since last December 7, when they met at Oslo to consider means of negotiating peace in the Finnish-Russian war.

Even as Koht left Oslo last night for the conference, the sinking of two more Norwegian ships and the setting fire to a third in the North Sea were reported.

Norwegian newspapers attacked unrestricted submarine warfare as the "purest piracy" and the Shipping Times asked whether it "would not be a fair situation if deliveries to Germany from Norway were reduced by one loading each time the Germans sink a Norwegian ship."

The ministers were expected to seek some means of halting the sinkings and also to ask Great Britain to modify her blockade measures so neutral ships would not be forced through danger zones to control stations.

Norway was concerned particularly with the ramifications of the Altmark case. Among these were reports indicating that allied warships were patrolling the Arctic coast off Northern Norway, apparently with the intention of halting German shipments for high grade iron ore from Kirkenes, northern Norwegian port.

The British have criticized Norway for allowing German ships to traverse her territorial waters.

The Altmark, which ran aground when British naval units cornered her in Gjessingfiord, was refloated last night but there was no immediate indication when she would depart. Britain has asked that she be interned. Norway has demanded return to the prisoners taken from the Altmark. Authoritative sources indicated that the Norwegian government might ask that the incident be submitted to an arbitration board.

Swedish Minister Delayed.

The Swedish foreign minister was delayed in starting for the conference by the Swedish dispute with Russia over the bombing of Pajala. He met with the foreign affairs committee of the Swedish parliament after the Soviet answered a Swedish protest over the bombing with a flat oral denial that Red Army planes had done the bombing.

The Swedish foreign office said an investigation proved that the bombers were Russian and fragments of the bombs showed they were Russian made.

While the ministers were expected to be concerned chiefly with their own problems, they also were expected to discuss means of helping Finland without compromising their own neutrality.

On his arrival here, Koht said he saw no reason why Norway and Britain should not be able to reach an agreement on the Altmark. Norway, he added, was "willing to accept any form of arbitration."

(The Oslo newspaper Dagbladet reported the Norwegian Minister to London had been instructed to propose arbitration of the affair to the British government with the form of arbitration to be decided later.)

FOURTH SESSION OF LEGISLATURE

eral ranks since the party came to power in 1934.

From the session opening, in the Throne speech debate, on matters of privilege, on matters of "urgent public importance," and for other reasons there was constant sniping at the federal government's war efforts. Premier Hepburn and Col. Drew shared honors for bitterness of attack.

Then came Jan. 19 and Morgan Baker (Lib. York North) with his defence of the Mackenzie King government. Other Liberals supported him. Surprised by this sign of apparently failing leadership, Premier Hepburn dramatically presented his condemnatory resolution. It received 44 votes. There were ten against it—all Liberals. Before the vote the premier announced that defeat of the motion would mean the government's resignation.

Now with the federal campaign in full swing, Liberal after Liberal who voted for the resolution—including six cabinet ministers—have jumped into the campaign behind Federal Liberal candidates. Premier Hepburn is silent. Best political guess is that he will refrain from participation.

Pipe of Peace Stamped Out.

The pipe of peace the premier and Col. Drew had smoked together as they criticized the federal government was stamped out when debate came on the measure that necessitated calling the legislature weeks ahead of the usual time. The act to amend the Succession Duty Act passed on straight party division.

Col. Drew said the legislation closing the courts to appeals on the valuation of certain securities in estates, was as bad as anything in Hitlerian Germany. The government said it was necessary to guarantee to the province death duties rightfully due, but whose collection had been stopped by a Supreme Court injunction.

Second major opposition onslaught came on the measure to extend the municipal council terms to two years providing an escape for any municipality that voted itself out of the bill's provisions. Original government intention had been to make the two-year term mandatory, but a storm of criticism modified the bill before its presentation.

Retroactive Tax Increase

A retroactive tax increase on corporation incomes, the added revenue being taken into budget estimates, was passed without division. The opposition failed to forestall the increase and then failed to have the government drop the retroactive feature.

Sitting after the House prorogues will be a committee to look into proposed reforms in Ontario's judicial procedure. The government referred to this committee bills designed to streamline court procedure by abolishing Grand Juries and by reducing petit juries in County Court civil actions from 12 to six. Earlier in the session the government dropped a bill for unification of Ontario police forces in time of emergency or serious crime.

Pleasant surprise of the budget was the fact there were no new taxes. Only tax increase was that on corporations. The government considered reimposing a Provincial Amusement Tax, but dropped the idea. Not so pleasant about the budget however, was the $4,500,000 deficit on the current fiscal year and the dropping of the municipal subsidy to one mill from 1 1-2 mills.

Accused of Perjury

In its final business session yesterday, the House heard Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Lands and Forests, accuse C. W. Cox (Lib. Port Arthur) former Ontario Minister without portfolio, of perjury and attempted blackmail. The perjury was alleged to have occurred Thursday in Mr. Cox's evidence to the timber committee.

Wherever two or three would listen to him, Mr. Cox would promise his hearers "the greatest scandal since confederation," charged Mr. Heenan. He accused the member of getting documents from dead men's estates and then "going through the country attempting blackmail."

The House killed a bill, unacceptable to the government, but would have restored the right of a voluntary passenger in a motor car to sue the owner or operator of such car for damages suffered by reason of the gross negligence on the owner or operator.

Government Bill Dies.

Another bill that died, also unacceptable to the government, was one that would have provided an appeal to a Supreme Court judge for a workman dissatisfied with an award of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Lack of co-ordination among federal; provincial and municipal police forces was deplorable, said Attorney-General Conant, but public opinion apparently was not ready for co-ordinated control. Mr. Conant was referring to criticism Friday by Leopold Macaulay (Con., York South) because Provincial Police didn't clean up gambling dens in Toronto suburban areas.

Mr. Conant said the Provincial Police were ready to help when asked, but only friction resulted when they went in unasked.

A report from Commissioner William Stringer of the Provincial Police was read by Mr. Conant. It recalled a triple murder case in Hamilton in 1925 when Commissioner Stringer, then an Inspector, went to Hamilton unasked to offer his aid.

"I reported to the Chief Constable who flew into a rage and advised me to return to Toronto and advise the Attorney-General that the Hamilton police were capable of handling the matter themselves." Mr. Conant quoted Commissioner Stringer's report, adding the mystery was never solved.

FORTIFIED COASTAL AREA

By Max Harrelson
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Copenhagen, Feb. 24.—(AP)—The Foreign Ministers of Denmark, Sweden and Norway jointly sought today means of halting the sinking of their ships, bombing of their towns and violation of these territorial waters, while still maintaining their neutrality.

The Foreign Ministers, Dr. Peter Munch of Denmark; Halvdan Koht of Norway and Christian Gunther of Sweden, scheduled meetings this afternoon and Sunday.

'Parallel Action" by 3 Countries

Koht declared before the first session that the "sharpened sea warfare" and its effect on the Scandinavian countries would be one of the principal topics for discussion.

"Parellel action by the three countries will be considered, he said.

Even as the Foreign Minister gathered, word was received that another Dannish vessel, the 1,206-ton Aase, had been sunk in the Atlantic with the loss of 16 lives.

1—Repeated sinkings of Northe Finns relinquished it.

(The Soviet command's communique today attributed slowness of the offensive to heavy snow and fog, but said twelve more Finnish fortifications had been taken yesterday, including four artillery positions of iron and concrete.

ALLIES HAVE NO FEAR

domination of the world."

"The next move," he said, "is up to Germany."

"We have no reason to fear the result of this struggle, however long it may last," the Prime Minister declared.

Aims are Listed

Reiterating the concrete terms of British war aims, Mr. Chamberlain listed them as follows:

First, independence of the Poles and Czechs must be secured. Secondly, we must have some tangible evidence that will satisfy us that any pledges or assurances given will be fulfilled.

He said that under the present German government there can be no security for the future—its rulers have repeatedly shown that they cannot be trusted to keep their word either to foreign governments or to their own people.

It is therefore for Germany to take the next step and to show us that she has once and for all abandoned the thesis that might is right.

"France and Great Britain," Mr. Chamberlain declared, "are determined to insure security by continuance of the complete identity of purpose and policy which now unites us and which after the war will form the foundation on which international relations between our two countries are built."

Others Must Assist.

However, he said, 'France and Britain cannot and would not wish alone to settle the new Europe. Others must come in and help us above all to bring about disarmament which is the essential feature of lasting peace."

Ridding nations of their fear of abandoning the "power of defence", said the prime minister, "can only be a gradual process; it will probably take many years to achieve it, but once we have re-established confidence among nations in each other's good faith, we can make a beginning and each step forward will make easier the step that follows."

He held out the promise of economic aid for Germany after the war, saying, "re-establishment of confidence in Germany herself can do more than any other nation since she herself has done much to destroy it, and when she is ready to give reliable proofs of her good will, she will not find others lacking in the will to help her overcome the economic difficulties that will accompany a transition from war to peace.

"In that which I have put forward as our aims, there is nothing humiliating or oppressive for anyone."

He repeated, "The next step does not lie with us. We are resolved that freedom shall prevail, and it is because tyranny and intimidation have sought to prevail over freedom that we have entered the war.

"Until we are satisfied that freedom is safe, we shall continue to fight to the utmost of our strength and the strength of the whole empire."

Recalling that he spoke in this, his home city, nearly a year ago, "just before Herr Hitler had proclaimed, in the breach of his own solemn assurances, the annexation of Bohemia and Moravia," Mr. Chamberlain asserted:

"By that one act in March last year, Herr Hitler shattered forever any faith that remained in his pledged word and disclosed his ambition to dominate the world by force.

"That was a black moment for me, who had striven so hard to preserve peace and who had hoped against hope that if the German chancellor had broken the promises of his predecessors he would at any rate keep his own."

Chamberlain Highlights

selves in hysterical exclamations of indignation.

We do not stand alone. During these six months of war our alliance with France has grown into a friendship and understanding so close that, as was observed after the last meeting of the Supreme War Council by M. Daladier, the two governments act and think as one.

As with the governments, so with the peoples. When on a recent visit to France, I had the opportunity of seeing something of that great and growing army of ours, which side by side with the magnificent soldiers of our French ally, keeps watch over the western front.

This intimate understanding is one which must not be ended with the termination of the war, but must rather help us to work out the problems of the new Europe in an association in which we shall gladly welcome the collaboration of others.

There is another and growing source of strength to the allied cause on which we can look with particular satisfaction and pride. Before the war it was a common belief in Germany that if this country should ever again become engaged in hostilities with her, she would not a second time enjoy the support which in 1914 she gained from the dominions.

Well, Germany has again been gloriously disappointed; for from all parts of the empire is coming not merely enthusiastic approval of our cause, but a steady stream of men, munitions and material which daily is adding new strength to our arms.

In London we see every day members of Canadian contingents on leave from their headquarters, and when we think that these men have travelled many thousands of miles, leaving behind their parents, wives and even young children, to cast in their lot with us against the tyranny of the aggressor, we must be profoundly impressed with the moral greatness of the cause which has inspired so intense a conviction of its righteousness. I said just now that besides men we were receiving munitions and material from the empire, and I should like to give you an idea of the scale on which they and we are working. We expect, for instance, that in the first 12 months of the war we shall be spending over 100,000,000 pounds in Canada alone.

From Australia and New Zealand we have arranged to take the whole of their exportable surplus wool clipping for the duration of the war and a year afterwards.

From South Africa we are making further wool purchases. Altogether these arrangements mean that we are purchasing half of the normal wool exports of the whole world.

Again from Canada and Australia we have already purchased nearly 4,000,000 tons of wheat since the war began, and I might add that we have contracted for 437,000 standards of soft wood from Canada and 350,000 fathoms of pit wood from Canada and Newfoundland.

And that leads me to the reflection that this tremendous advantage is ours today by virtue of one thing, namely, command of the sea by the Royal Navy.

In the patrol of the high seas or in such spectacular actions as the battle of the River Plata or that brilliant cutting out expedition that rang around the world last week when H.M.S. Cossack rescued some 300 British seamen from German brutality, our sailors have shown that for skill and seamanship, for doggedness and daring, they can bear comparison with the greatest sailors of the past.

Since the beginning of the war you may be surprised to know that some 50,000,000 tons of shipping have entered or cleared from our ports. The convoy system which we started in the first month of the war has been so successful that out of 9,000 British, allied and neutral vessels which sailed in convoy, only two-tenths of one per cent have been lost.

Let us pay our tribute to the reservists and volunteers of the fishing fleet who man these minesweepers for their dauntless courage and tenacity in carrying out their arduous task in the face of all the dangers that beset them of winter storms and the ruthlessness of the unscrupulous enemy.

YOUNG BROILERS SOLD QUICKLY ON CITY MARKET

Prices Generally Compared With Those of a Week Ago

BRISK BUSINESS

Choice young broiler chickens the first of the season greeted Saturday city market shoppers today. The birds were offered at from one dollar to $1.10 the pair and vendors had little trouble in disposing of their stocks. June birds of good quality sold at prices ranging from $1.15 to $1.30 with fowl offered at from sixty to seventy cents each. A few ducks sold at one dollar each.

Prices generally compared to those of a week ago, and although stocks offered were well below those usually offered business was fairly brisk, in spite of the threatening weather.

Egg prices were steady at twenty-five cents the dozen for Grade "A" selects, slightly inferior qualities were offered at twenty-three cents while a few mediums were disposed of at twenty-one cents the dozen.

Staple vegetables which reached a new local all time high two weeks ago, maintained the same levels with parsnips selling at one dollar the bushel. Carrots, turnips and beets at eighty cents and onions at $1.25 for the same quantity. Potato prices were firm with seventy-five pound bags offered at one dollar each.

Butter Remains Steady

Inclement weather drove the majority of shoppers into the comparative comfort of the inside market, where home - cooking booths were well-patronized. Honey was offered at 35 cents for four-pound pails with sauerkraut selling at ten cents the quart. Horseradish in small bottles sold at ten cents each.

Farmers' butter quotations showed no change over these of a week ago with pound rolls offered at thirty cents each and two-pound quantities at fifty-five and sixty cents.

Northern Spy apples headed the fruit display with choice No. 1 stock selling at $1.40 for hamper-packed fruit. Stark Delicious sold at approximately the same price with Russets, Tolman Sweets and other winter varieties offered at one dollar the bushel.

Whitefish was quoted at twenty cents the pound while a brisk business was done with mudcats selling at fifteen cents for the same quantity. Fresh pike demanded ten cents the pound, and a few lake herring went at 7c, fish for 25c.

A few young pigs were offered at from $5.00 to $6.00 but business was dull, during the earlier hours at least.

GERMAN PLANES PAY VISIT TO PARIS OUTSKIRTS

Reconnaissance Flight is Conducted by Nazis Deep Into France

ALLIED FLIERS ACTIVE

Paris, Feb. 24—(AP) — French military dispatches today reported five squadrons of German scouting war planes had penetrated deep into France, some reaching the outskirts of Paris.

British and French planes also carried out reconnaissance missions, the dispatches said.

The French took many photographs over Germany, the dispatches added, while British planes patrolled the North Sea. No encounters were reported.

This morning's French communique said only, "Nothing to report."

HONG KONG RAPIDLY BECOMING "GIBRALTAR" OF THE ORIENT

The nose of a well-sandbagged piece of coast defence artillery is pointed into the sky, TOP LEFT, at the British naval base in Hong Kong, which is fast becoming the "Gibraltar" of the East. Although the main theatre of war between Germany and the Allies has been on Europe's west front, Britain has not been asleep in the Orient, where Japan is rapidly expanding. The Hong King fortifications are rapidly being strengthened by the addition of the latest implements of war and by reinforcements of men. An air view of the boom that stretches across the main shipping channel at the British naval base is shown, TOP RIGHT. This boom would efficiently trap any enemy submarine that might attempt an attack during manoeuvres at the British stronghold, BOTTOM LEFT while British troops are shown on a route march, BOTTOM RIGHT.

TURKS READY FOR WAR—HAVE ARMY OF 2,000,000

The republic of Turkey, caught between the demands of Germany and Russia—and Italy, too—may find itself forced to fight. In which case, the Turks will rely on a modernized army whose war strength is estimated at 2,000,000. Unlike the Turkish force which went to war in 1914 on the side of the Central Powers, the Turkish military establishment of today is a modern, motorized force which compares favorably with that of other European powers of similar size. ABOVE are four views showing the modern fighting force Turkey can place in the field as an ally of Britain and France if war should become inevitable this spring.

Lines of possible action in the spring

Gen. Maxime Weygand

War on the eastern front is foreseen this spring, with more than 1,000,000 Allied troops concentrated there under Commander-in-Chief Maxime Weygand, of France, who describes his great army as a "fire department" and himself as a "fireman."

The Allied armies include soldiers from all parts of the French and British Empire, including forces from Australia, New Zealand and Egypt, as well as the Turkish war machine. When action comes, additional troops probably will be rushed to the Near East from France and North Africa.

The aid of Turkey, against which the Allies were forced to mass 1,000,000 men in the last war, is a prime factor in Allied plans. Turkey has shown definite sympathy with the Allies and self-interest points to her union with them. She would be threatened by both Germany and Russia if Roumania fell to the Nazis or by any Balkan aggression by the Reich.

Should Rumania and her oil fields be threatened, Gen. Weygand's hosts might (1) advance eastward through Turkey or (2) ship directly through the Dardanelles to Rumanian ports. There they would be joined by Rumanian troops.

In event Russia and Germany unite in the Near East, Weygand's armies might try to drive through the Caucasus and cut the Soviet's oil pipe lines (A) from the Baku oil fields on the Caspian Sea to Batum on the Black Sea, thus severing Russia's principal supply line and her main feed line to Germany.

Gen. Weygand naturally has not revealed Allied plans and strategy but the 72-year-old military genius is supremely confident and declares "We are prepared, ready for a thorough job."

SWEDISH KING MAY ABDICATE OVER AID TO FINNS

Reports from Stockholm state that Swedish military leaders may force the issue of direct aid to Finland and cause a political upheaval in Sweden, which might lead to the abdication of King Gustaf, LEFT. The reports stated that in the event of Gustaf's abdication his son, Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf, would undoubtedly assume the throne of Sweden. King Gustaf had publicly announced that Finland can not expect direct aid from Sweden in her fight against Russia and the Swedish government has refused to allow troops to pass through Sweden to Finland.

Airmen Greeted in England by Capt. Balfour of the Air Ministry and Earl of Derby, Who Welcomes Them on Behalf of Great Britain—Two of Squadron From Belleville

By FRED BACKHOUSE

Canadian Press Staff Writer

With the Royal Canadian Air Force in the south of England, Feb. 26 —(CP—Cable)—The men of the first squadron of the R.C.A.F. in England completed the job of settling down in their headquarters at this Royal Air Force station this morning.

They arrived during the night by a special train direct from the harbor of the northwest coast port where they landed Sunday evening. They were up early working with zest after the comparative inactivity of the Atlantic voyage.

All the men were reported to be fit and well, looking forward to their first flight in "English air."

The location of the station is at present a military secret. But it can be said to be in pleasant countryside.

Why The Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Weathering! The effects of weathering are very noticeable in old graveyards, some of the stones of which show lettering once distinct and now hardly decipherable. Weathering is the crumbling and decay of any substance by natural agencies of which the atmosphere is very important. Stones that have remained practically unchanged for centuries in Egypt with its dry, equable climate begin to decay when brought to a wet and colder climate. The weather agencies causing decay are the mechanical and chemical action of water, wind, frost, atmospheric gases, and changes in temperature. Among these water is the most important, causing crumbling and decay by both mechanical and chemical action.

SCANDINAVIAN NEUTRALS AGREE ON FUTURE POLICY

Will Support Each Other Mutually in Their Negotiations With Belligerents

COMMUNIQUE GIVEN

(By Max Harrison, Associated Press Staff Writer)

Copenhagen, Feb. 26 — (AP) — Scandinavian neutrals sought to avoid becoming involved in war at a week-end conference by agreeing to "support each other mutually in their negotiations with belligerents."

The foreign ministers of Sweden, Denmark and Norway also expressed the hope the Finnish-Russian war could "be brought to a peaceful solution which preserves the full independence of Finland."

In another passage apparently aimed at Germany's submarine warfare, a communique issued last night at the close of the conference said:

"The foreign ministers agreed to raise serious objections to and endeavor to avert violation of, the principles of international law in the conduct of naval warfare,

WELLES CONFERS WITH CIANO

Conversation on Foreign Affairs Lasts More Than an Hour

Rome, Feb. 26 (AP). — Sumner Welles, President Roosevelt's special investigator of European problems, conferred for an hour and a quarter today with the Italian foreign minister, Count Galeazzo Ciano, and said they "had a very gratifying and helpful conversation".

Five minutes after Welles left the foreign office, Ciano went to report to Premier Mussolini on the discussin, Welles' first on a tour of the principal capitals of Europe.

Welles' presence in Rome continued to attract scant attention among Italians as a whole, most of whom were ignorant of it. The Fascist press yesterday published nothing about the arrival of the President's representative.

It was announced, meanwhile, that Pope Pius would receive Myron C. Taylor, President Roosevelt's personal emissary to the Vatican, tomorrow for presentation of his credentials.

Taylor and Welles disembarked at Naples yesterday from the Liner Rex and came separately to Rome.

CAMPAIGN WARMS UP

Hon. W. D. Euler Says Govt. Will Have Bill for Unemployment Insurance if Elected

(By the Canadian Press)

With the Dominion election just four weeks away, the government pointed its chief campaign into the west today and the Conservatives planned to concentrate on eastern Canada.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King was en route to Winnipeg where he will speak tomorrow night in his first public address of the campaign. It will be followed up by another speech in Prince Albert, Sask., Thursday before he returns to Ottawa. Justice Minister Lapointe then will tour the west as the leading government campaigner.

Conservative leader Manion, winding up his western trip, speaks at Kakabeka Falls, Ont., near Port William tonight and then returns to central Ontario and the Maritimes.

Wages Single-Handed Fight

So far Dr. Manion has waged an almost single-handed fight against the Liberals but several outstanding Conservatives shortly will start intensive campaigning and somewhat balance up the hustings duel.

R. L. Maitland, British Columbia Conservative leader, and Lieut. Col. George Drew, Ontario Chief, will make speaking tours and M. A. MacPherson, of Regina, will follow up his Maritime campaign with a trip through central Canada.

The party lost a good orator and a caustic critic of the government, however, when Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader in the Senate, announced he will not take part in the campaign.

2 Firemen Hurt, Dog, Three Canaries Are Rescued

Toronto, Feb. 26 (CP).—A dog and three canaries were rescued by firemen while another dog suffocated early today during a $20,000 blaze at the plant of the Robert T. Purves Company. Two firemen suffered slight injuries, one in a fall, the other from shattered glass.

A call for reinforcements was placed after the fire spread from the second to the third floor. Task of the firemen was made more difficult through ice-coated ladder rungs and frozen uniforms and topcoats. The flames fed on rolls of tarpaper and other inflammable roofing materials and thick smoke hampered the firefighters.

Firemen found the body of a dog in the smoke-filled office of the plant. The crew of an aerial truck carried the other dog and the canaries, pets in the plant, to safety.

Defence Against Hypothetical Mass German Air Raid is Carried Out

London, Feb. 26 (CP).—Unheralded realistic passive defence exercises, in which 30,000 persons participated directly or indirectly, took place over a large part of southern England yesterday.

Theme of the exercises was a hypothetical mass German air raid on Southampton, Portsmouth and Gosport. The supposition was put to the participants that due to heavy losses among civilians and widespread fires it was necessary to call in effectives from other regions under unusually difficult conditions.

Between 600 and 700 ambulances were called into play as well as 65 "rolling hospitals" and two hospital trains.

The main streets of Southampton were barred to traffic. Authorities lent a grisly touch to the proceedings by planting the wreckage of a German warplane—supplied by the Royal Air Force—in the ruins of a large building near the city's centre. In addition, three automobiles were overturned on the sidewalk.

The idea was that half the building had already burned and that scores of soldiers, seeking to rescue its occupants, were caught in the ruins and suffering from injuries of various sorts, indicated by scraps of paper pinned to their persons.

Four thousand persons were supposedly killed or wounded by the imaginary raiders.

Sir John Anderson, Home Secretary and Minister for Home Defence, was the official observer during the exercises and was understood to be pleased with the way the various participants carried out their work.

Lord Tweedsmuir's Ashes Arrive in England By British Warship

Urn Will be Placed in Elsfield Church, Oxfordshire, for Burial Later in His Native Scotland—Impressive Scene at Canadian Port as Dominion's Farewell Paid

London, Feb. 26 (CP Cable)—The ashes of Lord Tweedsmuir arrived at a south coast port today in one of the naval vessels which had escorted the first squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force across the Atlantic.

They will be taken later today to Elsfield Church, Oxfordshire, to remain there until a date for interment is arranged.

The ashes, contained in an urn, were brought ashore from the warship in the barge of the senior naval officer of the port.

When ashore the urn, covered with a Union Jack, was carried between two lines of naval ratings standing at attention with reversed arms, and placed on a train bound for London.

Among those present were Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom, the senior naval officer of the port, and civic dignitaries.

Canada's Farewell

An Eastern Canadian Port, Feb. 26—The funeral urn containing the ashes of Lord Tweedsmuir, late Governor-General of Canada, has arrived in England. It was borne across the Atlantic by one of the British cruisers that at the same time conveyed the latest Contingent of Canadian fighting men overseas. In that company were many men who, a few weeks previously, had passed before His Excellency on parade. Then he stood at salute before them. On this occasion they saluted him in death.

The ashes will await the arrival of the Lady Tweedsmuir and other members of the family in Scotland

FRENCH, GERMANS ARE WATCHFUL AS SPRING COMES

Patrol Activities Are Stepped Up on Western Front — French Repulse Raid

AERIAL OBSERVATION

Paris, Feb. 26 (AP).—French and German troops, keeping close watch over each other with the approach of spring, have stepped up their patrol activities on the western front.

A sharp German raid was reported repulsed yesterday in the Wissembourg Gap, which opens into France's Alsatian plains along the Rhine. Both sides sent out scouting parties farther west in the Saar and Moselle Valleys.

This morning's French communique briefly noted "increased activity of contact units on various points of the front between the Moselle and the Saar."

Aerial observers kept pace with the land scouts. Two German reconnaissance flights were reported yesterday deep over eastern France, while French fliers brought back photographs of German lines.

Spring-like weather turned snow and ice into a mass of mud along the front.

German Communique.

"In the west, minor local artillery fire as well as reconnoitring activity in the air by both sides.

"Watch was kept on the west front and over the German (Heligoland) Bight by pursuit planes but without contacting the enemy.

"One French plane of the Potez-63 type was shot down by anti-aircraft artillery in Eifel.

"One U-boat under the leadership of Lieut.-Capt. Herbert Schultz, returning from a long distance cruise, reported sinking 34,130 gross register tons.

RUDDER BROKEN, BRITISH PLANE CROSSES N. SEA

Plane Flies Two Hours "Blind" After Battle in North Sea and Finds Self Over Irish Sea

RETURNS TO E. COAST

London, Feb. 26—(CP)—An official release today told how a Royal Air Force pilot had flown across the North Sea and landed safely in England after a fight with a German bomber which damaged its rudder so it could not be used.

The German plane was reported too badly damaged to take advantage of its crippled adversary. The pilot was not named, but the plane was said to have had a crew of three.

The crew of a Bristol-Blenheim bomber told how they outmanoeuvred five speedy German Messerschmitt pursuit planes over the North Sea Saturday and escaped into the clouds with valuable photographs of German naval bases. The Blenheim was hit six times but none of the crew was injured.

The British Air Ministry reported the incident in the following brief communique:—

"Aircraft of the Royal Air Force yesterday carried out a reconnaissance flight over Heligoland Bight and Northwest Germany. One aircraft was attacked by five Messerschmitts. Having repulsed six separate attacks, our aircraft returned safely."

Crew Land Craft Safely

In the first instance the three men of the crew chose to risk their lives to bring the valuable craft down at its home base rather than jump to safety after a precarious three-hour flight had brought them back to England.

Though the pilot's name was not

Allies to Win First Great Battle If Let Complete Plans, Says German

Zurich, Switzerland, Feb. 26 (CP-Havas).—If Germany permits the allies to complete their preparations for attack, Germany will have lost the first great battle of the war before it is fought, Lieut.-General Horst von Metzch, German military writer, warned today in the Nazi publication Deutsche Adelsblatt, copies of which reached here today.

"If the western powers can marshal their armies to bring them to the strength necessary for an attack without being hindered by the German forces, then the entente can on that score already consider the first important battle—or rather the first western campaign—of this war as won," wrote the general.

He warned against excessive optimism on Germany's part, declaring the German-Soviet economic deal would begin to operate only in the more or less distant future, while before that Germany would have immense and difficult tasks to fulfil.

Finns Admit Surrender to Reds Of Koivisto Islands

Great Coastal Batteries Anchoring Western End of Mannerheim Line and 20 Miles South of Viipuri Now in Hands of Russians

SUFFER HEAVY LOSSES

Correspondent Describes Trip to Front Northeast of Lake Ladoga, the Train Being Bombed at Every Station Enroute

Helsinki, Feb. 26 (AP)—The Finnish high command today acknowledged that Finland had surrendered to the invading Russians the strategic islands of Koivisto, armed with great coastal batteries anchoring the western end of the Mannerheim line.

These islands, situated off the town of Koivisto, are 20 miles south of Viipuri, lying in the Gulf of Finland near the entrance to Viipuri Bay.

(Possession of the islands presumably would give the Russians a new advantage in their drive in Viipuri, normally Finland's third city, by aiding an attack from the sea as well as from land.)

Drive on Isthmus

Russian land forces already have driven on the Isthmus itself up a railway toward Viipuri as far as Kaislahti, 7½ miles due south of Viipuri, according to the Finns. The Russians apparently are cleaning up the area between the railway and the coast.

"On the Isthmus our troops have given up the Koivisto Islands," said today's daily army communique. "On February 25 the enemy continued his attacks on the western part of the Isthmus.

"The attacks were checked by fire from our artillery and infantry, and the enemy suffered heavy loss in men."

By WADE WERNER

Associated Press Staff Writer

Helsinki, Feb. 26 (AP) — This correspondent has just returned from the front northeast of Lake Ladoga and must admit that it was comparatively relaxing after the experience of getting there in good bombing weather.

Six of us left Helsinki by train. An hour later, just as some of us had taken off our shoes, the first air raid alarm came, and we all tumbled into the snow.

No bombs. We climbed back aboard, but when we reached the next station the town was burning after a heavy bombing.

Three of our number finally arrived at Sortavala, 175 miles from Helsinki, 33 hours after our departure. Another and I arrived after 45 hours, including eight hours of jumping into snowy woods and two hours of dodging bombs. The sixth member of the party arrived after 55 hours.

Normally this journey should have been an easy, comfortable, overnight jaunt.

Illogically one's first impulse is to blame the railroads, but on second thought one realized it is a wonder that the railways keep running at all.

Stuck to Train

The war correspondent must be an athlete—a good jumper on and off of trains and a sprinter into the woods when the situation demands.

After six or seven sprints into the woods, there was an alarm on our train at 2 a.m.

"Take your choice, lads, the woods or the train," said a compassionate conductor. One whiff of the Arctic breeze outside and I chose to cling to my seat in the warm train. So did most of the Finns.

When it comes to running the Bodies of Father And Daughter Taken From Ice-Bound Waters

Timmins, Ont., Feb. 26 (CP). — Bodies of Joseph Raffaele of Timmins and his nine-year-old daughter were taken from the ice-bounr waters of the Mattagami River, near here, today and police said they believed the two drowned yesterday when a truck in which the two were riding crashed through the ice.

The ice-covered truck also was taken from the river bottom today. Walter Willson, owner of a dance hall in front of which the drownings occurred, said he noticed a large hole in the ice yesterday but thought it might have been made by boys while at play. Ice-cutting operations had been under way in the district the past three weeks, he said, and in some places the ice was thin.

Police endeavored to piece together more details of the drownings but believe they occurred before noon yesterday.

The crew were reported saved, but the ship was said to be sinking.

The Orizaba was reported to have come from the United States by way of spain to Hammerfest, which port it left Sunday.

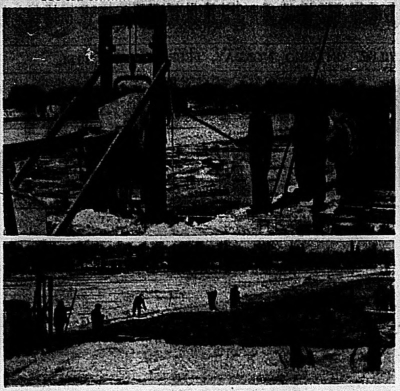
CUT ICE CHANNEL AS PRECAUTIONARY FLOOD MEASURE



Anxious to prevent a recurrence of serious floods that have worried Belleville annually during the spring break-up of the Moira river, ice-cutters are busy cutting a 1,000-foot channel in the ice covering the mouth of the river. Three motor-saws operated by expert ice-cutters move up and down the ice hacking off large blocks. The apparatus that lifts the ice from the water to a platform is shown TOP. The chunks are slid into a waiting truck to be carried away. The channel is shown BOTTOM, as it nears completion.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

BRIEF CASE STOLEN FROM PARKED CAR

A brief case, the property of R. H. Ketcheson, was stolen from the parked automobile of George H. Stokes, National Conservative candidate for South Hastings in the forthcoming Federal election, over the week-end, Mr. Stokes informed city police of the robbery yesterday. The automobile had been parked on Front St. and the brief case stolen during Mr. Stokes' absence. The initials on the brief case were "R.H.K.". Mr. Ketcheson is the secretary of the local Conservative Association.

ICY PAVEMENT CAUSE OF ACCIDENT

When the automobile in which they were returning home skidded into the north ditch one mile west of Belleville, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Martin, West Bridge St., sustained minor injuries and were taken to the Belleville General Hospital early Sunday morning. Their automobile was completely wrecked as the result of crashing into the ditch. Mr. and Mrs. Martin were returning from the R.C.A.F. depot when the accident occurred on Highway No. 2. Dr. J. Lind attended Mr. Martin, while Dr. G.S. Cronk treated Mrs. Martin for minor lacerations and bruises at the hospital. Motorcycle Patrolman Sam Ervine investigated the accident and reported that a charge of careless driving would be preferred against the driver.

WORKMEN REMOVE SNOW FROM STREETS

Employees of the Public Works Department were out in full force this morning engaged in the removal of Saturday's heavy fall of snow from downtown streets. Numerous trucks were taking their turns at being loaded with snow from Front St., for disposal at the bay.

Sanding operations were also under way as the city sander made its rounds of intersections and slopes throughout the city spreading sand and cinders on the slippery places.

PERFECT SKIING IN OAK HILLS

Tracking fresh paths and runways in the white mantle of snow that descended over the countryside the day before, skiers from Belleville and district again visited the Oak Lake sector Sunday to enjoy almost perfect skiing conditions. The familiar skiing courses on the well-known slopes of "Boardman's Hill" were covered with three to four inches of snow and a large number of skiers as well as the occasional candid camera fan, were seen enjoying themselves to the full.

FIRE DEPARTMENT HAS QUIET WEEKEND

Two fire alarms were turned in at the local fire halls over the weekend without damage resulting in either case. The reels were called to 245 Ann St. yesterday where a chimney fire was in progress but application of chemicals soon had the flames under control, while just at midnight last night they had a run to the corner of Front and Bridge Streets where smoke was seen rolling from under the hood of a motorist's auto. Apparently the motor had become overheated, stated officials of the fire department this morning, with the result that smoke was seen rolling but there were no flames so no fire damage resulted.

MANY PROMISES MADE BY KING NOT FULFILLED

Manion Makes This Declaration at Meeting Held in Winnipeg on Saturday

CHANGES MIND

Winnipeg, Feb. 26—(CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King is the world's greatest reformer out of office and its greatest reactionary in office, Conservative Leader Manion declared in an election campaign address here Saturday night.

Replying to the Prime Minister's broadcast speech of Friday night in which he said he did not intend to make any more promises in this election than he ever had., Dr. Manion produced a 1935 Liberals peakers' handbook which contained a number of election proposals. He asked how long the people of Canada would be "bamboozled" by such tactics.

"My only conclusion is that Mr. King is the greatest reformer in the world out of office and the greatest reactionary in office, a theoretical reformer but a practical reactionary," Dr. Manion said.

En Route to the East

En route back to eastern Canada after a campaign tour of the west which took him as far as Victoria, Dr. Manion addressed an audience of about 1,800 in the Walker Theatre. He is scheduled to make a speech in Kakabeka Falls, Ont., tonight.

The Conservative leader told his audience that in 1935 the Liberals had pledged to provide work for the unemployed, promote policies which would revive trade, establish unemployment insurance, set up an investment control board to protect investors, to uphold the supremacy of parliament, give workers and consumers a larger share in government, reduce debt and government costs, redistribute wealth, promote greater provincial co-operation.

Promised to End Poverty

Mr. King was not satisfied with making all these promises before election but on the night following his election promised to end poverty amidst plenty and make possible the "health and peace and sweet content" which is the rightful heritage of every Canadian.

Dr. Manion told his audience "a number of the best Liberals" are ready to join in formation of a National government.

"Most of the best Liberals are outside the government and a number of them are ready to join me in forming a National government," he said. "The government can guess who they are."

Prime Minister King had said he and his cabinet would not enter a National government, but they had not been asked. Such an administration would be formed of only the best brains in Canada and most of the present cabinet would not qualify.

Explains His Stand

Referring to the Prime Minister's claim that National government and Union government were the same thing, Dr. Manion stressed that "in 1917 there was union of two existing parties to carry out conscription."

"National government as I propose it will be made up of the best minds of any party or no party to handle the country in war and then through the post-war period. It's true I said I was against National government last July but the country was at peace then. The National government proposal last summer was that the two old parties should unite to amalgamate the railways—for one purpose as in 1917."

Reiterated Opposition.

He reiterated his opposition to railway amalgamation and conscription and maintained that the Prime Minister and Justice Minister Lapointe knew his stand on these questions although they continued to suggest the opposite.

Dr. Manion recalled that in 1917 Hon. T. A. Crerar, now Minister of Natural Resources, had contended that "'a union government is found necessary in every civilized country that is prosecuting this war. Britain, France, Italy and New Zealand have it. If you have a great duty on your hands like the carrying on of a war of this size, you cannot afford to have your forces split by party squabbles. When your house is burning down it is not a time to quarrel with your neighbor, but to get together'."

The Conservative leader challenged Mr. King to explain what the Liberal government had done with $188,000,000 spent on defence from 1935 up to the outbreak of the war. The prime minister is scheduled to speak in Winnipeg tomorrow night.

"I see Mr. King is going to speak in Winnipeg and I challenge him to explain what he did with that money."

Partnership of Canada's Longest Married Couple Broken by Death

Mrs. Peter A. Maybee Dies at Her Home Near Bloomfield on Sunday—Would Have Celebrated 77th Wedding Anniversary on March 15th

IN HER 95th YEAR

Death severed the golden cord of over three-quarters of a century of marital happiness at noon Sunday when Mrs. Peter Addison Maybee, co-partner in the Dominion of Canada's longest married couple, died at her home a few miles south west of Bloomfield. Had Mrs. Maybee lived until March 15th, she with her husband would have celebrated the 77th anniversary of their wedding. The grand old lady was in her 95th year. Mr. Maybee is 97, and still hearty.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed at time of going to press as they are pending the arrival of the only son, seventy-five-year-old Stanley Maybee, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

The late Mrs. Maybee had been ill for a year, and her passing while not entirely unexpected, has caused a wave of sadness over the entire district in which they had lived for the past twenty-two years.

Their fame was continent wide, and had even extended to faraway England. Two years ago, and last year, when they celebrated the 75th and 76th anniversaries of nuptials, they were the recipients of congratulations from His Majesty King George VIth, Prime Minister Mackenzie King, and other prominent personages.

Mrs. Maybee was born in Cherry Valley, Prince Edward County, and trudged the roads of that district to the little red schoolhouse where she received her early education.

It was back in 1863 that a twenty-year-old boy and eighteen-year-old girl "joined hands to make a living", to quote Mr. Maybee. When a youth Mr. Maybee left his native Athol township in Prince Edward County and went to New York. But the memory of the "girl he left behind" soon hurried him back, and they were married in a log cabin one Sunday evening after church, in Cherry Valley. He wore a long-tailed coat, and she a hoop-skirt.

Later they returned to New York where they kept house for a few years. Their decision, however to return to their native Canada was hurried one day when riots occurred and Mrs. Maybee narrowly missed being killed by a stray bullet.

For fifty-two years, Mr. and Mrs. Maybee kept a general store and grist mill at Odessa, Ontario, but upon their retirement returned to Prince Edward County where they were given a home by a Mr. Alex Williams, one of their "boys" who worked for them and who showed his deep gratitude for many kindnesses in this manner.

At the celebration of the 76th anniversary of their wedding last year, Mr. Maybee stated that his recipe for long happy married life was the fact that "we made a contract and never broke it. I have just behaved myself, lived a temperate life, minded my own business, helped others when I could, paid strict attention to business affairs, and made church and church work a real part of my life."

Police Fail to Locate Missing Young Girl

Mystery surrounds the disappearance of 19-year-old Mary Murray, local domestic, who left her boarding house on Saturday morning enroute to her place of employment and has not been heard of since. Police were notified of her disappearance on Sunday and despite efforts to locate the missing girl at the home of relatives, no trace of her was reported today.

Miss Murray resided with Mrs. Gilbert, 34 Bridge St., and left her boarding house on Saturday to go to her employment at the home and W. S. Cook, 185 Charles St., but the girl failed to put in an appearance at the Cook home. Miss Murray's parents are not living, although other relatives reside in the district, but they could throw no light on her disappearance early today.

WOMAN ATTACKED AS SHE ENTERS HER OWN HOME

Mrs. Thomas Blaind, 22 Catherine Street, Not Hurt in the Scuffle

SCREAMS BRING HELP

As she entered her home, with her arms filled with parcels, Saturday night, Mrs. Blaind, 22 Catherine Street, was attacked by a man. The screams of Mrs. Blaind and her three-year-old daughter, who stood at the door, attracted passing citizens. Her assailant then released Mrs. Blaind, after struggling with her and placing his hand over her mouth to prevent her from giving an alarm. The man escaped as he ran south on Everett Street and disappeared before pedestrians could give chase.

Mrs. Blaind told city police on their investigation, that she entered her home off Catherine Street with her arms filled with parcels. "I had left the side door unlocked while I went to get some potatoes at the corner grocery store. When I returned I opened the door and switched on the kitchen light, Mary, my little daughter standing in the doorway. As I placed the groceries on the table I turned around to see a man standing behind the open door. I tried to run out, but he grabbed me and put his hand over my mouth, but not before I had screamed once," Mrs. Blaind told the police. The little Blaind child seeing her mother attacked cried out loudly, attracting passerbys and the man released Mrs. Blaind, who gave chase out of the door. Before the people on the street realized she was in trouble her assailant had escaped.

Mrs. Blaind gave the police an excellent description of her assailant and police are hoping to apprehend the man soon.

Two Belleville Members of R.C.A.F. Arrive in England

Announcement today of the arrival in England of the 110th Squadron Royal Canadian Air Force, first unit of its kind to leave Canadian shores to fight for King and Empire, brought sighs of relief and a glow of justifiable pride from at least two families in Belleville.

For within the ranks of the airmen who received a tremendous ovation when they landed on English shores, were two residents of this city.

One is Aerial-Gunner Sergeant Frank Benson, 158 Burnham St., a veteran of the Air Force, who has been in the service for eleven years, and has trained recruits in practically every centre in the Dominion, and who was selected from a group of instructors to accompany the squadron overseas.

The other is Aircraftsman Henry Liddle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Liddle, 145 Pinnacle Street, who joined the Trenton base in September and who was one of those selected from that station to join the 110th squadron, two weeks previous to its sailing for overseas. He is a radio and wireless operator.

Aircraftsman Liddle is well-known in the city and was a popular student at Belleville Collegiate Institute. His parents received a cable from Engand today announcing his arrival.

SENTENCE REDUCED ON DOUGLAS STEWART

Toronto, Feb. 26 —(CP)— Appelate Court at Osgoode Hall today confirmed conviction of Douglas Stewart, secretary-treasurer of the banned Communist newspaper, The Clarion, but reduced his sentence from two years less a day to six months definite in Ontario Reformatory, plus an indefinite term not exceeding 18 months.

Stewart was convicted a month ago by Judge I. M. Macdonnell of publishing and circulating a newspaper likely to prejudice recruiting, interfere with the efficient prosecution of the war and cause disaffection to His Majesty's subjects.

Montreal, February 26—For the fifth year in succession, over 4,000 employees of Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada Limited will receive a service dividend totalling approximately $225,000, equal to 5 1-2 per cent of wages earned in 1939, it was announced today by Earle Spafford, President of the Company.

Payment of the service dividend for 1939 brings the five-year total of such dividends to well over one million dollars.

The dividend is a reward for loyalty and efficiency and to enable the employees to participate directly in the company's prosperity.

Imperial Tobacco Company employees also benefit from group insurance, a sick-benefit plan, a pension fund and a week's annual vacation with pay which has the unusual feature of being available to factory workers as well as others.

R.C.A.F. Band Delights Large Crowd With Splendid Program Featuring Popular Melodies and Solo Numbers

Regarded as one of the finest musical organizations in Eastern Canada, the Band of the Royal Canadian Air Force, lived up to its reputation here last night when it not only played to a capacity audience, but saw many people turned away, at the Capitol Theatre where hundreds enjoyed a variety concert given in aid of the war work services of St. Julien Chapter, I.O.D.E.

Featuring the program which in its ensemble numbers brought out the fine artistry of the "Flyer" musicians in various selections, were instrumental and vocal solos The latter were offered by Mr. John Wiltshire whose fine baritone voice was heard in "Mandalay" and "The Bells of the Sea." The chimes accompaniment played by little Miss Cooper, clever daughter of Bandmaster Flight-Sergt. Tommy Cooper, who directed the band during the concert, was outstanding in this number.

Instrumental solos were given by Aircraftsman Lockyer, euphonium, Sager, cornet and Mr. C. E. Scholey, trombone. Feature numbers by the band included "A Hunting Scene," the popular "Beer Barrel Mascaro of tht Capitol Theatre Umbrella." Popular war melodies caught the responsive ears of the audience with other numbers being roundly applauded.

Tribute was paid during the concert by Lieut. Fred Jobson, conductor of the Belleville Municipal Band, who acted as chairman for the occasion, to Manager Tommy Mascaro of the Capital Theatre who generously offered the use of his building gratis for the occasion and to the artists taking part. The silver collection amounted to $72.00.

Further tribute was paid to the members of the R.C.A.F. band who, it was stated, are foregoing week-end leaves in order to offer their services to raise funds for war work, for various patriotic organizations.

Following the concert, members of the band and artists were guests of Mrs. J. E. Neate, Regent of the St. Julien Chapter, and her associates at the Oddfellows Hall where delicious refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed.

Pilot Interrupts Game to Obtain Pictures of Secret German Base

by MARCEL CAUDILLIERES
Havas Staff Writer

With the French Air Force at the Front, Feb 26 (C.P. Havas) — The pilot threw down his ping pong bat—he was ahead, too, for the first time in days—and dashed off to dress for a grimmer game, played 34,000 feet above the earth with death keeping the score.

He returned a few hours later with a dozen German planes clinging murderously on his tail and a store of precious plates in his cameraman's machine.

It started when a report by a secret agent, back from the German side, said important movements of troops, material and even planes were going on. Indicating with his forefinger two spots on a headquarters map, he said: "It is here or here—certainly within a radius of six miles."

But where? The map guarded its secret well; the agent had told all he knew. Only planes could reveal the exact spot.

So on receipt of a coded order the pilot abandoned his ping pong game, rushed to his quarters and reappeared ready for Winter flight above the clouds. His cumbersome suit was threaded with electric wires to keep him warm at below-zero temperatures. His gloved hands spoke for him with clumsy gestures.

Half an hour later he was above his goal, 24,000 feet up. The cameraman set methodically about his business.

As the plane wheeled for home, its task accomplished, tiny black spots appeared in the sky in the distance. The men counted. One —two—12 German fighters.

"Shall I dive or climb?" the pilot called to the chief observer. The observer shrugged. "It's up to you."

3 Guns Against 36

The plane climbed. Up, up—26,000, 28,000, 30,000 feet. The black dots grew. There were three machine guns in the plane—and the enemy had 36.

Thirty-four thousand feet now, and the pack was still gaining. But there were not yet in gun range—and far beneath. The Rhine moved eastward past the wings. The plane was over home soil. The enemy wheeled and headed back toward the Reich.

The pilot returned to his ping pong game and the colonel examined magnified prints of the photographs taken on the flight. He ran his finger along a representation of two faint ruts, leading across a field between a highway and a wood. In that wood the enemy lay hidden.

But not hidden now. The colonel spoke into his telephone. Gunners calculated ranges. One quiet word and the wood would be unrecognizable.

Police Blotter

Believed to have been the work of juveniles, burglars entered the premises of the Weston Bread Company, 99 Pinnacle St, and stole a few cakes and mince meat pies over the week-end.

While investigating this break-in Plainclothes Constable Fred Isard saw foot prints in the freshly fallen snow yesterday which, when investigated were found to have led from the Belleville Metal and Waste Company where a break-in had taken place without the knowledge of the owners. Subsequent check-ups here revealed nothing of great value was taken, however.

Arrested for Fraud

Sergeant Arthur Harman and Detective Fred Isard arrested Peter Johnson, Shannonville, on a charge of attempted fraud on Saturday night. Samuel Goodman, local merchant, complained to police that Johnson had attempted to issue a cheque for goods purchased. Johnson was arraigned and held.

Ivan Scott, proprietor of the Hastings Motors, Front St., complained to police that a motor car battery and a quantity of gasoline had been stolen from his premises over the week-end. The battery was removed from a car parked on the company used car lot, while the gasoline was siphoned from a nearby truck.

Engaged in Fisticuffs

Two lads, who were engaged in fisticuffs on Front St., Saturday night, were taken to the police station, where they "cooled off" and were released with instructions to report to Chief Kidd today, while a woman inebriant fell into the hands of the law Saturday night and will appear in a subsequent court charged under the L.C.A.

30 OF CREW MISSING

London, Feb. 26 — (CP) — The Swedish freighter Santos, 3,840 tons, was reported today to have sunk in the North Sea. There were 12 survivors and 30 of her crew missing. The cause of the sinking was not disclosed.

'Horseless Carriage' Scores a Triumph Over 'Old Dobbin'

The modern "horseless carriage" scored another triumph over its rival "old dobbin" at the intersection of Church and Dundas Streets, today, but not before dobbin had caused considerable wreckage to its successor.

J. M. MacDonald, R.R. No. 4, Belleville, was driving his automobile westerly on Dundas Street, today as a milk wagon, driven by J. L. Burke, Belleville, was emerging from off Church Street. Mr. MacDonald applied the brakes of his car, but the vehicle skidded and the horse and car collided, the force of the impact forcing the animal aboard the engine hood of the car. Considerable damage resulted to the headlights, hood and a broken windshield, while old dobbin was cut slightly by flying glass and the harness broken. No personal injuries were sustained by the drivers, P. C. Arnott reported after investigating the accident.

Winnipeg Man Goes on Trial in Engelberg Death

New York, Feb. 26—(AP)— Ernest Kehler, 24, Winnipeg Canadian prize fighter, went on trial in Kings County Court today on a charge of first degree murder in the slaying Dec. 6 of Dr. Walter Engelberg, German Consulate Secretary.

Police quoted Kehler as admitting he bludgeoned the German when the latter made improper advances to him in Engelberg's home in Brooklyn.

The first venireman was asked whether he would be prejudiced by the fact that Engelberg was connected with the Nazi regime and was a homosexual. He said no, but was challenged by the defence.

Kehler was arrested in Toronto two weeks after the killing.

Records Reveal Pershing Wanted Total Victory Before Armistice

Washington, Feb, 26 (AP).—General John J. Pershing, commander-in-Chief of the American Expeditionary Force, opposed the 1918 armistice with Germany and wanted the Allies to push on to "complete victory" and "unconditional surrender" of the Germans.

This was disclosed today when the United States State Department published the second volume of the papers of Robert Lansing, Secretary of State during the Great War. The volume also reveals that a year earlier Mr. Lansing had expressed to President Wilson a distrust of peace proposals by Pope Benedict XV, because he suspected that the Pope had become an unwitting "agent of Germany".

Gen. Pershing's attitude toward the armistice is set forth in a letter from Colonel Edward M. House to President Wilson enclosing recommendations made by the United States general to the Allied Supreme War Council on Oct. 30, 1918, when overtures already were being received from the Central Powers for an armistice.

Gen. Pershing contended that: the Allies were gradually increasing in strength through United States assistance and the Germans were weakening; morale was high on the Allied side, low on the other; the Germans might use an armistice to revivify their army, and the Allies might lose the chance to obtain permanent world peace.

Col. House's letter contains sarcastic comments on Gen. Pershing's initiative from David Lloyd George, Georges Clemenceau, and himself.

Gen. Pershing estimated that the Allies on the Western Front had an advantage of 37 per cent over Germany in men and 35 per cent in guns. He commented that "Germany's morale is undoubtedly low," but cautioned the Allied leaders that "as the apparent humility of German leaders in talking of peace may be feigned, the Allies should distrust their sincerity and their motives."

The appeal for an armistice is undoubtedly to enable the withdrawal from a critical situation to one more advantageous," he said.

He said that a cessation of hostilities short of capitulation would postpone, if not prevent, the imposition of satisfactory peace terms.

"I believe that complete victory can only be obtained by continuing the war until we force unconditional surrender from Germany; but if the Allied governments decide to grant an armistice the terms should be so rigid that under no circumstances could Germany again take up arms," Gen. Pershing wrote.

Col. House, in the accompanying letter to President Wilson, quoted Lloyd George as commenting, after reading the recommendations:

"Political, not military; some one put him up to it."

M. Clemenceau commented, "theatrical and not in accordance with what he has said to Marshal Foch."

Col. House, apparently irritated by Gen. Pershing's initiative, wrote Mr. Wilson that the general handed him a copy of the recommendations "five minutes before I entered into conference this afternoon (October 32) of Prime Ministers and Foreign Secretaries and without previous notification. The original already had been sent to the Supreme War Council."

One letter from Mr. Lansing to President Wilson, after the British Ambassador had handed him a copy of the peace proposals Pope Benedict presented to the Allies and the Central Powers in August, 1917, said:

"My own impression is that this statement of peace terms emanates from Austria-Hungary and is probably sanctioned by the German government. It is undoubtedly preliminary to the Stockholm conference" (an international Socialist meeting to prepare for peace).

The Pope, according to Mr. Lansing, proposed restoration of Belgian independence in exchange for restoration of Germany's colonies; creation of an independent state out of part of the old Kingdom of Poland, and waiving by all parties of the losses sustained by them.

In a further letter to Mr. Wilson, Mr. Lansing, "after a careful analysis of the Pope's appeal," objected to denying Belgium, Serbia, Montenegro, Rumania and France the right to reparations for "the enormous damage done by the German invaders."

"Is the lawless destruction of hundreds of merchant vessels by German submarines to be condoned?" he asked.

"If I read the Pope's appeal aright, all these questions are to be answered in the affirmative. It is carrying the Christian doctrine of forgiveness a long way, since the burden falls very heavily on one side and very lightly on the other. The suggestion is lacking in justice and reciprocity."

Mr. Lansing called into question the Pope's motives, saying, "I think it necessary to consider the motives which inspired the Pope's appeal or the influences which induced him to make it at this particular time, when the military tide of the Central Powers is at the flood, when the submarine warfare appears to be most menacing, when the power of the United States is just beginning to be exerted, when Russia has not yet gained her equilibrium, when a vigorous peace propaganda in this country and other countries is being pressed and when the socialistic bodies are being employed, as at Stockholm, to demand an end of the war. I would only say that the Pope, probably unwittingly or out of compassion for Austria-Hungary, has become in this matter the agent of Germany."

Tuscon, Ariz., Feb. 26 —(AP)— General John J. Pershing believes that had the Allied powers heeded his recommendation for Germany's unconditional surrender in 1918, Europe would be at peace today.

In an interview, the commander-in-chief of the American expeditionary force in the last war declared events since the Armistice had justified his stand at the time.

General Pershing sent a document to the Allied Supreme War Council in Oct. 30, 1918, setting forth the reasons why he believed an armistice was then ill-advised.

In it he asserted that by "accepting the principle of a negotiated peace rather than a dedicated peace the Allies would jeopardize the moral position they now hold and possibly lose the chance actually to secure world peace on terms that would ensure permanence."

Although he counselled forcing Germany to lay down arms unconditionally, the 79-year-old General said if an armistice was granted "the terms should be so rigid that under no circumstances could Germany take up arms."

In reality, he added, the armistice permitted the Germans to march back "with colors flying and bands playing, and posing as "victims of political conditions."

General Pershing's comments on the inter-Allied negotiations preceding the armistice was prompted by yesterday's disclosures from the second volume of papers of Robert Lansing, United States secretary of state during the last war.

'Chamberlain Continues to be Right in Eyes of All Peoples'

Ankara, Turkey, Feb. 26 (CP-Havas)—"If Hitler is right in the eyes of his own people, Chamberlain continues to be right in the eyes of all peoples," Deputy Falih Rifki Atay wrote today in the semi-official newspaper Ulus in comment on the speeches by the German and British leaders Saturday.

Hitler's speech confirmed, the writer continued, that Germany has a program "for imposing conflict," not for "offering peace." Such speeches, he said, do more for the Allied cause than speeches by Allied statesmen.

In another article in the same paper Deputy Sukru Exmer declared that German demands, starting with the principle of equality and militarization of the Rhine, passed dyed to the theory of vital living space and now involve condemnation of the French and British Empires. He warned Hitler that one earlier proponent of such doctrines died at St. Helena and a second is living out his days in a Dutch village.

128 ATTACKS CHARGED TO FOE

Total of German Air Attacks on British Unarmed Merchant Ships and Fishing Vessels Since September 3rd

London, Feb. 26 (CP)—The government today charged 128 instances of attacks by German aircraft on "unarmed British merchant ships and fishing vessels," from the start of the war up to Feb. 22.

Richard Butler, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, gave this figure in answer to a question in the House of Commons as to whether such attacks were "a breach of Herr Hitler's undertaking to President Roosevelt that the German Air Force would not bomb civilians."

Mr. Butler said that the facts were "too well known" to require a statement.

All British merchant and fishing vessels in the North Sea now are being armed against aircraft.

There was an echo of the Altmark case in a query concerning the extent of territorial waters along the peculiarly indented coast of Norway, to which Mr. Butler replied that they were the subject of much discussion and not finally determined.

He said, however, that the Norwegian government while not departing from her claim for a four-mile limit has informed the British government that for the purposes of this war it would not accept obligations of neutrality beyond three miles from the coast.

Question is Asked

Replying to Emanuel Shinwell, Labor, who asked if there was any connection between "delay" in installing anti-aircraft guns on trawlers in the North Sea and the sending of 100 such guns to Finland, Geoffrey Shakespeare, parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, said:

"Defensive arming of trawlers and coasting vessels sailing in the North Sea is proceeding with all speed. The weapons supplied to Finland are not so suitable for anti-aircraft defence as those which are being fitted in our trawlers and coasting vessels."

Old-Timers Reminisce Over Political History of Hastings

County Has Been Traditionally Conservative With Only Six Liberals Returned Out of Eighteen Federal Members Since 1867

ONE PRIME MINISTER

"She is goin' to be a tough election to decide aforehand," the grizzled old-timer said to his crony, as they sat in a Front Street hotel lobby.

Blue smoke curled over their heads from venerable pipes. Nearby the hum of hotel life carried on in a lively monotone.

"Do you know," his friend said, crossing a rheumatic knee that caused a slight grimace of pain to flit over his face, "that it is years since I have been in this county. How does it stand politically.?"

"Well," came the reply, "it has been pretty much Conservative, in fact nearly all Conservative since 1867. Let me see," and he drew a worn leather book from his pocket, adjusted a pair of spectacles upon a wrinkled nose and studied the contents of the book.

"Hmm, one, two, three, four, by gosh, I was right, this county has returned only six Grits since 1867." But that don't mean to say they won't make it seven this coming election, or that it won't remain at six," he added hurriedly.

"I've got all the facts and figures here, and if you've got a minute I'll tell you what this county has done in the way of sending the boys down to the big houses in Ottawa since 1867."

"From 1867 to 1903 the county was divided into three divisions, Hastings East, Hastings West, and Hastings South," he said by way of explanation. "Later it was divided again, but I'll tell you about that when I come to it."

A match spluttered in his hand, and after the more or less ancient pipe was under a full head of steam he continued. "Now take Hastings East riding. Bob Read, a Tory, was elected in 1867, but he only last five years, and John White, another Tory, took over, holding down the job until 1887, when S. B. Burdette, the first Grit to win the seat was elected. After two sessions J. M. Hurley, another Liberal took his place, but he only sat for one session."

"By this time the Tories must have figgered that it was their turn for they elected W. B. Northrup in 1900 and he held the seat until the county was re-divided in 1903," he said.

No Liberals Between 1867 and 1903

"In Hastings North, it was a different story," the oldtimer continued, "for in the period between 1867 and 1903, not one Liberal did they send to Ottawa. No siree, it was all Tory in this riding. The old stalwart, Mackenzie Bowell, later Sir Mackenzie Bowell, took the seat in 1867 and held it until 1900 when he gave way to A. C. Carscallen, who retained it until the new division took place.

"Now we come to Hastings West," he said. "This riding, too, was practically 100 per cent. Tory, for it only returned one Liberal in the period between 1867 and 1903. Jim Brown, a Tory, was the first member who sat until 1878 when a namesake, James Brown but a Liberal, took over for a period of five years. He was defeated by A. Robertson, a Tory, who stayed until 1891, when H. Corby, another Tory, took over and held the reins until the famous Guss Porter succeeded him in 1903.

"Wasn't there a division of the county about this time?" his friend queried.

"I was coming to that," was the reply.

"In 1903," he continued, "Hastings was divided into two divisions, East Hastings and West Hastings. Guss Porter took the Hastings West seat, as I said before, in 1904, and held it until 1924 when he was defeated by Charlie Hanna, a Liberal.

"Guss was a popular fellow," the old-timer laughed "in fact he was so popular with some of the boys in the north country that during the last bye-election held here a few years ago some of 'em came down and wanted to know why Guss wasn't runnin'," and he chuckled reminiscently.

"In the other ridin' of Hastings East, W. B. Northrup held the seat from 1904 until 1917, then another Tory, T. H. Thompson, took over the job. He held it until 1924 when another division of the county was made. This time the ridin's consisted of Hastings South and Hastings-Peterboro," he said.

"In 1925," W. E. Tummon, Conservative, took over the Hastings South seat and held it until 1935 when Charles Cameron won the seat in October of that year. However, much to the regret of his own party and a lot of the other, he decided not to run in the comin' election on the advice of his physician.

"In the other ridin' of Hastings-Peterboro, popular Doc A. T. Embury of Bancroft, was elected in 1925 and he held the fort until 1935 when a Liberal from Peterboro, Rorke Ferguson, defeated him," the oldtimer said.

"So there is the set-up, the way we have done it for the past seventy-three years. What the coming election will bring, I don't know, but it looks like it might be a hot one."

TWO ADMIT THEFT OF CAMP UTENSILS

George Saunders and Curtis Helmer, Trappers, Lodged in Bancroft Jail

Bancroft, Feb. 26.— (Special)— Acting on a complaint from Harold and James Elliott, sons of Thomas Elliott of West Huntingdon, who are jobbing for G. W. Jones of Bancroft in Bruten Township, Provincial Constable Palmateer and Game Overseer Inwood of Combermere drove by car Saturday morning, February 24th., into the Bruten Lumber Camps. From there they snowshoed a distance of seven miles to Big Rainy Lake to the camp of Curtis Helmer, age 31, of Madawaska and George Saunders, age 27 of Lake St. Peter, who were trapping in that vicinity. Helmer and Saunders were accused of stealing blankets, camp utensils, saws, etc., from the camp of the Elliott boys.

Upon being questioned both Helmer and Saunders admitted, so police state, stealing good on February 17th and stolen articles from their hiding place. Provincial Constable Palmateer immediately placed both men under arrest and gathering up the allegedly stolen goods they made their return journey to the Elliott lumber-camp and thence home. Some difficulty was experienced on the homeward journey as Boulder Lake, which constituted a part of the winter draw road, was flooded badly due to the weight of the logs, which were dumped there and going was disagreeable in these conditions with the car.

To lend a bit of natural environment to the homeward trek from camp to car Mr. Palmateer and Mr. Inwood had the pleasure of hearing the wails and growls of timber wolves. Helmer and Saunders were lodged in Bancroft jail Saturday night and were later remanded for trial, which will take place at a later date.

Beth Shannick, four year old daughter, of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Shannick was operated on for appendicitis in the Red Cross Hospital, Thursday night.

Mrs. William Plumley received word Wednesday night of the death of her mother, Mrs. William Hillis, who was a patient in the Peterborough Hospital. Mrs. Plumley left by train Thursday morning for Wilberforce where she attended her mother's funeral which took place Saturday, February 24th.

Mr. Alex Wadsworth who was severely injured last Wednesday evening by a falling tree is now in Bancroft Hospital under observation and treatment. His condition hasn't changed much since his admittance but there is considered a chance for his recovery.

The Ladies of Bancroft Chapter No. 157 O.E.S. held a quilting in the Chapter Room Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Rorke Ferguson, M.P., for Hastings-Peterborough Riding, was a business visitor in Bancroft, Thursday last.

The Ladies of St. Paul's United Church held a cafeteria tea in the basement of their Church, Friday evening.

Mrs. G. E. Towle who has been in Toronto, last week returned home Friday evening with her husband. Mr. Towle returned to Toronto Sunday evening.

A quiet wedding was solemnized, Saturday afternoon, February 24th., at the home of Mrs. Dave Watson, when her youngest daughter, Effie, was united in marriage to Thomas Card, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Card.

Mr. Hermon Maxwell met with a very painful accident Friday night when he fell and fractured his ankle.

Mr. James Kirk of Toronto, has been busily engaged the latter part of the week transporting the steam shovel, which had been used by Curran and Briggs Construction Company in the building of the Bancroft Peterborough Highway, from its storage on the Paudash Lake road to Bancroft for shipment by train.

Bancroft received a snowfall of about four inches Saturday, snow fell all day and evening. Winter seems to have made a quick return for Monday morning, the thermometer dipped to thirty below zero.

POLICE COURT

Peter Johnson, no address given, appeared before Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C., in today's police court charged with fraud, to wit the attempt to pass a worthless cheque. Before the accused could enter a plea, Chief Alex Kidd requested a remand, in the matter. "We desire to finger print this man and check upon him before bringing him to trial here," revealed Chief Kidd.

"I see no intent to steal here, but I advise you to refrain from frequenting beverage rooms," His Worship warned a teen-aged girl who appeared on a charge of the theft of a diamond ring. The ring was restored to its owner and the girl dismissed from custody.

"This entire affair commenced in a local beverage room where this girl 'borrowed' the ring from another woman, but failed to return it," pointed out Acting Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson, who did not press for a conviction under the circumstances. The accused girl stated she fully intended to return the ring, but had been apprehended at her home by Sergeant Booth and Plainclothes Constable Isard before she could return the jewellery. His Worship cautioned the accused regarding frequenting of beverage rooms.

Three inebriates all pleaded guilty as charged, two paying the assessed fine of the court, while the third was sentenced to serve 14 days in default.

PROGRESS OF ALLIES IN THE WAR

The story of the British Empire which is getting into its full stride was told the people of Manchester, the constituency which Prime Minister Chamberlain represents in the British Commons, and to the world on Saturday when he delivered the last of a series of informative addresses by members of the Cabinet on the progress of the war.

Within a week it will have been six months since the Allies went to war with Germany on her violation of Polish integrity. Half a year has gone. There has been much loss suffered by the Nazi Germans whose submarines have been caught at their nefarious practice and sunk and their trade has been wiped from the seas. Neutral and Allied shipping has suffered but the Allies are growing in their strength and in that the neutrals must see hope for the day when hostilities will cease and mankind see peace and security again visit the earth.

Mr. Chamberlain touched salient features of the situation. He pointed out that Britain and France need have no fear as to the result of the conflict however long it may last. He pointed out the Allied aims in the war, first to assure freedom to the Poles and Czechs and solid guarantees of peace and liberty.

He touched upon the justice of the Allied cause. Canada's response was specially held up as a sign of the moral greatness of the cause for which Britain and France are fighting. Mr. Chamberlain paid a tribute to the Canadians already overseas, one of the finest they have received. This was also a tribute to the Empire spirit of liberty. He showed that these men had come thousands of miles after leaving homes and families to fight to keep alive the principles in which Canadians as Britishers believe. He said that this had made a profound impression on the British people. And it must have made a profound impression upon the non-belligerent nations.
the world from Nazi menace themselves from barbarities and to establish an order more in keeping with the principles of Christianity. In the establishment of that order "Britain and France cannot and would not wish alone to settle the new Europe. Others must come in and help us above all to bring about disarmament which is the essential feature of lasting peace."

Two things stand out in this address. One is the remark "We are resolved that freedom shall prevail," for it was "because tyranny and intimidation sought to prevail over freedom that we have entered the war."

The other statement is "In that which I have put forward as our aims there is nothing humiliating or oppressive to anyone."

TRIBUTE TO THE MEN OF THE SEA

British tars who fought the Battle of the Plata against Hitler's Graf Spee were honored in the Empire capital as the men of the Exeter and Ajax, two of the ships which fought, marched through the streets of the metropolis of the British Empire to the plaudits of the Mother Country, the Dominions and Colonies.

In the war the navy and the air force have so far been especially called upon to face the enemy. Both have done marvellous deeds, the two co-operating in a manner to bring the utmost unity of power.

It was the navy men who were feted at Guildhall on Friday. It was an Empire's tribute to the men of the navy whom no foe could daunt.

The Royal Navy deserved all the praise that was showered upon the men who have succeeded Drake and Nelson upon the seas. They have gone where the meteor flag of England has gone and have endured the battle and the storm.

It was a happy coincidence that the men of the Achilles were feted at Auckland in New Zealand on the very day that those of the Ajax and Exeter were honored in Guildhall.

It was a great day for the Empire, a forecast of that great day when the Royal Navy with the Royal Air Force and the army will have, with the aid of the French, completed one of the great tasks of history in rounding up the Nazi menace to the world's security. For that great time is coming "after the battle and the breeze."

A NAZI CLAIM

Everyone has heard of the claim by the Nazis that Germany needs "living room." Now the Nazis tell of plans to make possible the filling up of great spaces in the empire Germany is being taught she must have. First there were too many Germans for the small territory she held, according to their claim. Now she will have to increase the number of Germans to fill up the country she has stolen in Poland and in Czechoslovakia. And so they want war children in Germany.

As the Nazis put it: Germany has not enough room and she takes territory from her neighbors and then has not enough men for it after she despoils the people. She must build up an empire and then fill up that empire. In the end of course the Nazis want a Germanized world.

So the Nazi claim is but another name for world domination.

ANTI-INFLUENZA SUBSTANCES DISCOVERED

Science has made another discovery, one of the many of this age. It has been found that the nasal secretions of humans contain a substance which inactivates the virus of epidemic influence, according to Science, the organ of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

This is of peculiar importance because 20,000,000 persons died in 1918 throughout the world 'flu epidemic. It may be the first step towards the conquest of this dread disease. The mysterious anti - influenza substance, discovered by Dr. Thomas Francis, Jr., exists in about the same amount in the normal healthy subjects and in the common cold patients. It does not exist in the same class of individuals in the same amount and some do not have it at all. The fact that some individuals possess this anti-influenza substance while others do not may explain why some contract influenza and others do not.

So science goes on, making discoveries which will add to the total of human happiness in the reduction of disease. Such a disease as influenza has been a powerful enemy of mankind and has laid a heavy burden on the health of the world. The new discovery may be an economic factor of importance.

Just Orn'ary Sort of Trip

The skipper of the little coasting motor barge inhaled his pint of beer and replied: "Oh, orn'ary sort o' trip, guv'nor!" Pint by pint grunt by grunt, monosyllable by monosyllable, I extracted from him an idea of what this ordinary sort of trip had been like.

I could see his craft at a buoy opposite the Thameside tavern; she was less than 300 tons and had practically no free-board. Her wheel-house amidships, surmounted by a stumpy mast, resembled nothing so much as a conning-tower. I could imagine her on a night passage, navigation lights prudently dimmed, the surges sweeping clean across her deck; her silhouette when touched by the probing finger of a searchlight, to say nothing of the suspicious purr of her Diesel engine, might cause eyes strained by excessive peering through the blackout of a winter night to jump to conclusions with resultant hasty and regrettable action.

He told me how the accolade from the searchlight was invariably followed by a game of question and answer from an interrogator hidden behind the light; war-time business of a confidential nature this and he was impressive in his reticence on this point. Usually the jumble of syllables tumbling down wind to him was drowned by the hideous racket of his engine and frequently he had to stop; even then the concerto of sea and wind made it difficult to hear. Sometimes uniformed authority boarded his craft and put him through a polite but searching cross-examination. The final question was usually the same: "Anything to report?" And I knew what his reply was "No, guv-nor. Orn'ary sort o' trip." Then when authority told him to carry on, there would be the infernal racket of the engine once more as the barge scuttled thankfully onwards to the shelter of London River.

Ordinary sort of trip! Only these little waifs of the coastways, know just how extraordinary their trips are these days. Sand, clay, coke, their cargoes are important but without glamour; no smart uniforms, no parcels of comforts, no days of riotous leave; none of the few-remaining compensations of war for them. Men of vast experience and little theory, they struggle by day with the intricacies of the International Code of Flag Signals, pondering long over the newly-installed flag-locker or the unfamiliar signal manual. By night they answer challenges in slow halting Morse on lamps still shiningly new. No longer can they go their own way; they must now follow the routes laid down for them. Menaced from above and below, there is all the time the ceaseless peering up and down.

Heaven knows their trips were bad enough in peace time; in war time—. Ordinary sort of trip! In those simple words I sensed the spirit which actuates not only the little coasters but all those who go down to the sea under the Red Ensign and the shadows of war. —(Reproduced by courtesy of the Editor, Lloyd's List and Shipping Gazette).

On a New Front

The grim economic war that has been raging on Germany's frontiers has taken a new turn and brought Central Europe once more into the spotlight of attention. A few days ago word came from Bucharest and London that Rumania had yielded to Allied pressure and had banned the export of all high-octane aviation gasoline to Germany. This had all the earmarks of a major victory for Britain and France; for while Germany may have reserves of gasoline for a Sitzkrieg, as the British Air Force calls the present war of inaction in the skies she can hardly support a campaign of unlimited bombing operations in the air, or a great land offensive on the western battlefields, without an uninterrupted flow of Rumanian oil. Russia is a potential source, but nothing more; for there is every indication that transport troubles this Winter have prevented Russian supplies from reaching Germany in anything more than driblets.

The importance of the Rumanian news has been recognized by Germany at once. It is reported that a spokesman of the German Government will go to Bucharest on Monday "for a showdown." German trade envoys already in that city are said to have declared that increased shipments of Rumanian oil are "a matter of life and death" to the Reich and that Germany will be compelled "to seek other methods" if Rumania fails to fulfill commitments made before her recent change of policy.

All neutral neighbors of Germany know from experience what these "other methods" mean. They mean pressure based on a tacit threat of armed invasion if the neutrals do not stand and deliver. But in Rumania the Allies have ways and means of counteracting, at least in part, the fear of a German attack. The extraordinary war measures now being taken in Turkey, and the sharp warnings of the Turkish press, may well have a direct connection with Rumania's present attitude. In effect, the Turks have told the Rumanians not to be afraid of Germany's anger, since a powerful Turkish army stands ready to help them. Nevertheless, the Rumanians themselves have now ordered what is described as virtually a general mobilization, and the stage has been set, in Bucharest and Berlin, Ankara and the Allied capitals, for decisions of importance. — New York Times.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

Different Causes of Breathlessness

The first question a physician asks a patient who thinks he has heart disease is:

"Do you get out of breathe easily?"

The patient may reply that, whereas he was formerly able to walk a mile or a half mile without getting out of breath, he new finds that he becomes breathless after walking a few blocks. Also, while he was formerly able to go up stairs at the ordinary walking rate without getting out of breath, he now finds that he has to go up more leisurely, practically rest with each step, or he is out of breath when he reaches the top of the stairs.

This getting out of breath easily is considered an outstanding symptom of a failing heart—the heart muscle has lost some of its power.

Unfortunately, the fact that breathlessness is an early sign of heart failure has become so well known that many individuals worry needlessly about their heart.

A very common cause of breathlessness is eating too much acid food, or rather, not eating enough alkaline food to overcome the acid food eaten. These acid foods are meat, eggs, fish and cereals, and at least one or two servings daily is considered necessary for health. But as they are acid foods, they may use up too much oxygen in their digestion and absorption into the blood and this extra using up of oxygen from the blood brings on breathlessness—need for oxygen. By eating more of the alkaline foods—milk, fruits, and vegetables—much of the acidity of the blood is overcome and breathlessness prevented.

How are you to know whether your breathlessness is due to a failing heart or to acidosis—too much acid in the blood?

Mr. J. C. Meakins, in the book "The Practice of Medicine" states that breathlessness due to acidosis is slow, deep and forcible, while that of the failing heart (which causes engorgement of the lungs) is rapid, shallow, and feeble.

If then you find yourself breathing deeply and heavily to "get your breath", it is likely that you have been eating too much acid food or not enough fruit and vegetables to make blood more alkaline.

If your breathlessness results in rapid, shallow, and feeble breathing, the lungs and heart should be examined.

Northwest India

In the event of Russia attempting to strike down through Afghanistan into India, the British do not want to be handicapped in their defence by marauding tribesmen. So they have launched a clean-up campaign in the Khyber Pass area.

It is not impossible that Soviet designs on Finland and Scandinavia, or on the Balkans and the Dardanelles, may bring Russia and Britain into open conflict. If such should happen, it would be natural for Moscow to try to cross Afghanistan, that small but rocky country between Asiatic Russia and India, to invade one of the most important parts of the Empire. Particularly is this so because there is some discontent in India over demands for independence.

There are two passes from Afghanistan into Northwest India. One is the famous Khyber, and the other, further south, in the Quetta sector. The Russians would have to break through one of the two, and it would be a tough job.

The cleaning-up operations of the British soldiers, however, might mean that they would want to meet the Russians before they even got into the Khyber. To do this, they themselves would have to go through the pass and into Afghanistan. While doing this they would not relish bullets from the tribesmen of the Fakir of Ipi, who has been a thorn in their flesh for years, and who are pastmasters at ambush.

The skirmishes on the Northwest frontier of India must not be regarded as something apart from the general international picture. The British have a reason for picking on this particular time to quell guerillas. They don't want to be pestered by them if they should have more important battles to fight.—Windsor Star.

War Fronts Broadening

Evidence continues to accumulate that the Allies are preparing at top speed for an extension of the war front. Of course, it was never anticipated from the start that hostilities would be confined to the Maginot Line and the Westwall, to the British blockade and the German submarine menace. Recent developments, however, have combined to bring about a change in conditions that may easily develop into such an extension of the conflict as will set all Europe aflame. While it is in the highest degree desirable to avoid alarmist conclusions, it would be folly to ignore the obvious implications of the latest moves before the footlights are behind the scenes.

The Altmark incident has brought into the open the violation of Norwegian neutral waters by Germany. The British have known ever since the war began that the Nazis were getting supplies of iron ore from Sweden, via the Norwegian port of Narvik, situated a few miles from the farthest northwest point of the Swedish-Norwegian border, vessels sneaking from Narvik south, always within Norwegian territorial waters, until they enter the Baltic via the Skager Rak and Kattegat. But they have not attempted to interfere with this trade up to now because they did not wish to be accused first of violating the waters of a neutral power.

The Altmark case, however, brought matters to a head. It convinced the British that Norway was incapable of preserving neutrality within her own waters. The attitude of the British Government today is that since this inability has been demonstrated and since such violation of Norwegian neutrality operates damagingly against the British, they are entitled to take matters into their own hands to protect their own interests.

This explains the dispatch of British warships to Arctic waters east of North Cape, evidently intended to close in the blockade, with special attention to the Russian port of Murmansk, which they shrewdly suspect is being utilized as a base for German submarines and possibly as an export point for certain Russian supplies to Germany, as well as to stop German ships carrying possible supplies to Russia via the Finnish Arctic port of Petsamo, at present in Russian hands and to prevent any possible attempt by Russia to send some of her submarines to help the German navy. The move is not officially confirmed, but the reports are sufficiently circumstantial to warrant attention.

To what extent Britain will press her activities in Norwegian waters remains to be seen. But a plain hint was given by a French spokesman this week when he said that the Altmark case "justifies the French and British Admiralties in any acts of reprisal they consider necessary to re-establish in the North Sea and Arctic Ocean the equilibrium which has been destroyed to the detriment of their interests."

Undoubtedly tension has been acutely increased throughout Scandinavia since the boarding of the Altmark. Tomorrow the Danish Norwegian and Swedish Foreign Ministers meet at Copenhagen in order to discuss the situation, and, if possible, to arrive at a common policy of action. Great Britain recognizes the extreme difficulty of their position, but at the same time naturally finds it impossible to permit of the continued violation of Scandinavian waters by Germany in view of the fact that no Scandinavian Power is in a position to enforce its neutrality within the three-mile limit. Supporting this view, a semi-official statement was issued in Paris today warning that the Allied Powers will take all necessary measures whenever neutrals fail to uphold their neutral rights.

Turning from the North to the Southeast the war clouds seem to be darkening over the Balkans, Turkey and Iran. The controversy about the supply of Roumanian oil to Germany grows more complex every day. The announcement yesterday that the Roumanian Government had satisfied London and Paris that Roumania would not increase her oil supplies to Germany and that she would not export airplane oil and gasoline to the Nazis is followed by reports today which indicate that Germany is bringing still greater pressure to bear upon Bucharest in order to get the oil she so sorely needs. Russian tankers have arrived at the Roumanian Black Sea port of Constantia with large supplies of oil, some of which has already been loaded on tank cars for trans-shipment by rail by Roumania, while the rest is being stored, waiting the reopening of the Danube in the Spring. The Roumanian Government has called up the last units of her army reserves. It is estimated that at the present time she has upwards of a million and a half men mobilized, and that this force will be increased by two millions by the Spring. Roumania is rushing artillery, munitions and gasoline supplies to her western front and hastening the completion of her new fortifications there as well as preparing for additional defensive works on other fronts.

Turkey is increasing her mobilized arms, strengthening her northern fortifications and co-operating with the Allied Commanders in the Near East with a view to action, should Russia attack from the Caucasus or Germany drive on the Balkans. The Turkish stand was made quite clear on Tuesday last, when the Turkish press declared it had no intention of being caught napping by Germany, as other smaller Powers had been caught, but that a German attack against the Balkans would see Turkey aligned with the Allies in their defence.

Rumours of possible Russian moves against Iran and upon India's northwest frontier via Afghanistan continue. The Russian Black Sea fleet, said to be entirely modern and built in Russian shipyards, has just completed manoeuvres in the Black Sea. But looking at the situation from all angles, it does not appear likely that Russia will make any move in any direction until she has settled her account with the Finns. In any event, the Allies' forces, together with Turkey, ought to be able to take care of any important Russian move against Iran. Yesterday the British Government decided to lend that country money to aid in strengthening its defences against possible aggression.

As for attacks against Afghanistan, the natural defences of that land are of such a nature, as to render any advance through it to the Indian northwest frontier a task requiring not only powerful forces and very lengthy lines of supplies, but also a degree of military engineering genius which there is not the slightest reason to suspect the Russians possess. Russian agents have tried to foment trouble along India's northwest frontier on and off for a hundred years or more, but they have never yet succeeded in doing any serious harm. The present recrudescence of activity by the notorious Faquir of Ipi need not therefore be taken as assuming any undue significance. Nevertheless, the Allies are alert on every Near Eastern front as keenly as they are on the West. They will not be taken by surprise. —Montreal Star.

He Put Hitler in a Comic Strip

By David Low, the British Cartoonist, in New York Times.

In one way a cartoonist's work is simplified in wartime because there is only one subject, though, if he be conscientious, there are, of course, many angles of it with which to deal. The most patient of readers grows bored with constant repitition of the points that the enemy is a fool and a blackguard and that our brave boys will kick his pants . . .

There used to be an established technique for drawing war cartoons. The cartoonist made pictures of British lions, Russian bears and German eagles striking attitudes, and saying things like "Bravo, little Belgium!" "England is proud of you!" or "This must not go on, sir!" to each other.

But this is all so foreign to the spirit of today as to seem like fairy-tale stuff. The British lion and so on are now Britannia, Germania, La Belle France and all of those statuesque females in Greek nightgowns who symbolized the imperialisms in the cartoons of our fathers.

That is, unless you hold that the present war is one between rival imperialisms, in which case I should disagree with you. R. I. P. to the Britannia stodge, I say. And also to John Bull, that symbol of smug, narrow patriotism, with whom the average modern Briton has nothing whatever in common. If you think that this average Briton is facing this war in that spirit and preparing to fight for, rather than against what that kind of thing represents, let me tell you that you are making a pretty considerable mistake.

In past wars, too, cartoonists used to run to what were called "powerful" cartoons; horrific scenes of mangled mothers and children, plenty of blood and bones. No doubt drawing cartoons of that kind gave—and gives — relief to the cartoonist; it helps to get surging emotions out of the system. But whatever their popular appeal may have been in past wars, they do not get across in this one. The present generation may admire the artistry of the composition, but it is unmoved by the trite statement that war is horrible, because it knows that only too well already. The movies and the newsreel have hardened it to visual horror. In looking at his cartoons the average man or woman of today is more analytical and wants to savor arguments and to appreciate where the sense of things lies.

Moreover, the horrific cartoon is not an effective political approach in this war. No dictator in these days is inconvenienced or even displeased by cartoons showing his terrible exercise of power or his terrible person stalking through blood and mud. That is the kind of idea about himself that a power-seeking world-beater would want to propagate. It not only feeds his vanity, but unfortunately it shows profitable returns in an awed world. What he does not want to get around is the idea that he is an ass, which is really damaging.

I shall always remember Hitler, for instance, not as the majestic monstrous myth of his propaganda build-up, but as the sissy who whined to the British Foreign Office about his dignity when I ran him for a while as a comic strip.

If I had been asked to choose a picturesque war lord, I should have had a big dark scowling man. Hitler has the will to be picturesque, but whatever you do with his face his physiognomy is essentially weak to draw, probably because Hitler is a mixed type — unlike the Nordic type of Goering or the Mediterranean of Goebbels. One of my difficulties about Hitler is that I have to use fine lines to draw his eyes, and when I send cartoons by radiogram to foreign countries the transmission process cannot pick up all these lines and my Hitler arrives at the other end with the eyes lost on the way. Goebbels, on the other hand, is good to draw—dark, sharp lines. As a citizen of the world I should not think it an improvement, but as a cartoonist I don't mind how soon Goebbels purges his friends and makes himself Public Enemy No. 1.

Stalin is good; or rather, should I say, Stalin's mustache is good, because the background is secondary. That mustache would dominate any landscape. On the strength of the mustache Stalin has established himself as a horrific superman in cartoons so successfully that one automatically draws him about seven feet high and broad in proportion. It comes as a shock to see that Stalin is a middle-sized, homely, amiable-looking old gent in real life.

On the Allied front the leaders are good to draw, too. Chamberlain, whose aquiline features in photographs might have earned him the title of the Avenging Eagle, is belied by his features. He falls into lines strongly marked but sad. He is known at the House of Commons as the Undertaker. Though easily drawn, he is a static one-pose man, unlike the volatile Lloyd George of the last war, who in his infinite variety of movement was the caricaturist's joy. Halifax, his lieutenant, has also only one appearance, but a highly picturesque one. Halifax is the foreigner's idea of the horse-faced Englishman come to life.

A cartoonist might complain, however, that the leaders of the democracies are hardly picturesque. They have no urgent need to dramatize themselves. Winston Churchill is a shining exception among the British side, probably because from his earliest political days he has studied his own caricatures and endeavored to live up to them. Far and away the best actor, he is now the most striking and drawable personality in British public life. "Clothes make the man" is a saw which might be pondered by democratic leaders, perhaps. Daladier is a Napoleonic type — a little sadder — who, if he wore a Napoleon make-up, could put Hitler in the shade. As it is, when I have to draw him I feel that his sack suit is incongruous.

The best man in Europe to draw, of course, is Mussolini, who may be added here as one who sits on the edge of this war. His highly dramatic, if now slightly old-fashioned, ensemble suggests always to me that he ought to wear a credit label: "Produced by Cecil de Mille".

Part of the cartoonist's social function (but not all of it) is to be a clown, which is just as it should be at a time like this. The strength of the British people is that it can see the joke and purge itself of bitterness in so doing. That, to me, as a student of the psychology of humor, is a test of the greatness of a people.

Daily War Survey

By The Canadian Press

Adolf Hitler's speech on Saturday was remarkable not for the things it contained but for those it omitted. Like most Hitler orations it was full of abuse, boasting and distorted history but unlike others it contained no specific threats to Germany's enemies nor promises to the German people.

He assured Germany of victory but did not say when or how it would be achieved. The threats of terrible aerial onslaughts against Great Britain, of total and lightning war which pervaded most speeches by Hitler and other Nazi leaders early in the present conflict were lacking.

This may be significant of much or nothing. It may be that the German high command is about ready to launch a surprise and does not wish to give the slightest clue to its secret designs. Again it may be Hitler finds he has talked too much in the past and is a bit afraid of leading Germans to expect spectacular action when none is in sight.

If Hitler has decided to hold his forces tight and secure behind the Siegfried line and fight a defensive war except for the present air, submarine and mine attacks on Allied shipping, the less said about the power of German arms and spectacular victories the better.

If the German Government hopes to feed its people and keep its war machinery in shape during the long years it would necessarily take to reduce Great Britain to submission by sinking ships Hitler must give the people a different kind of pep talk.

A DAY in which the spirit and stamina will be tested through oppositions and obstacles is the omen based upon the lunar and mutual aspects. There may be stubborn situations to be met with determination and resourcefulness. It is probable that the co-operation of employers or those in power may be counted on. But the front to cope with is subtle, deeprooted and crafty, and call for stratagem or tact, not impetuosity and force. Romance figures.

Those whose birthday it is may find themselves confronted by a year of stubborn obstacles and subtle oppositions, which may be successfully manoeuvred with tact and diplomacy rather than reckless and passionate reprisals. Employers and those of influence will be found willing to support industry, merit and fidelity. Patience and constructive programs are assured promotion and gain. In purely personal relations there may be a surprising note of romance.

A child born on this day may be energetic, skilful, resourceful and persistent, winning advancement or aid of superiors by its dependable qualities. But it may be subtle and at times passionate and jealous.

Fashion Flashes

THE NEW DANCES and the old too need pretty dance frocks. A beauty is in pink marquisette with a pointed girdle of fuchsia colored sequins. Long skirt falls in full folds.

There's a martial note about the new suits. A smart model is khaki colored gabardine with gilt eagle buttons on the jacket and the pointed flap pockets.

A flash of white lingerie or lace trims the new frocks. Black or navy crepe is used for a sweet frock with buttoned-down-the-front bodice and ruffled lingerie collar and cuffs. The skirt has peg-top pockets and shirred front fullness.

Get ready for Spring with a print frock. Black silk crepe forms the ground for a lovely sweet pea design in mauves, pinks, white and lavender, with green leaves. Skirt pleated all around and bodice with shirring and side drapery.

Look out and you'll notice many flowered hats. Pink and lilac hyacinths in silk and velvet form a smart little toque with flesh pink veiling forming a bow and drapery. Veil is edged in lilac velvet.

A useful companion for cruise or resort wear is the suit-dress. Spun rayon hopsacking in cool pastel shades makes a crisp suit, the shirt gored, the fitted collarless jacket with vertical flap pockets high on the bodice. Full sleeves are short.

UP NORTH the ski enthusiasts have their own brand of fashion, no less charming than warm sunshine clothes. For after-ski wear, one girl likes a white lamkskin vest with silver buttons and a red challis lining. Worn with black velvet after-ski slacks.

THE LAST DANCE will still find the girl with the lovely frock looking fresh and charming. A good choice is flesh-pink chiffon, the skirt with tiny clusters of fuchsia and copper colored sequins.

Gala Party Marks 14th Birthday of Minerva Chapter

Friday, February 23rd., the members of Minerva Chapter, O.E.S., celebrated the fourteenth anniversary of the Chapter's institution with a large gathering of members and visitors in attendance. A cordial welcome was extended to all from Mrs. Cooper, the Worthy Matron and Mr. Fred Wilson, the Worthy Patron.

The earlier part of the evening was devoted to the regular business routine and initiation ceremony at which Miss Edna Jobson was soloist. After the meeting a delicious lunch was served in the banquet hall. The table, reserved for the Past Matrons and Patrons, looked lovely with colored tapers, silver basket filled with daffodils, and a favor at each place. The tea table centred with a three-tiered birthday cake, (the gift of the Worthy Matron), decorated in the colors of the Order, was presided over by Mrs. Corah Adams, District Deputy Grand Matron, and Mrs. Louisa Modeland, past matron, who also has the distinction of being the first Matron of Minerva Chapter. Each received gifts of flowers.

Mr. Fred Wilson, Worthy Patron, was very efficient chairman and proposed a toast to the King, to Charter members and to Past Matrons and Patrons. Mrs. Laura Hyde, Past Matron, replied in a charming manner and gave a splendid review in rhyme, (her own composition) of Matrons and Patrons who had held office during the past fourteen years.

As Mrs. Grace Vanner, Past Matron was cutting the cake, Mrs. Valerie Parsons recited "The Brithday Cake". Mr. Harold Barrett with band accompaniment sang in fine style a selection of Scotch songs and was heartily applauded. Mr. Barrett's Scotch costume and accent left nothing to be desired.

Dancing to splendid music furnished by several members of the Belleville band was much enjoyed; Mr. Reg. Hinchey conducted.

Mrs. Embury Adams was fortunate in winning the birthday gift. Mrs. Clara Ironsides and Mr. Sager received the prizes for spot dances while Mr. Adams of Trenton and Miss Betty Truman both captured prizes for knowing their music.

During the evening Mrs. Albert Boynton who is leaving to make her home in Cornwall was presented with a gift. Mrs. Frank Correll and Mrs. Sam Hibbard were in charge of the evening's entertainment and refreshments and are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Father's Problem

Dear Miss Fairfax,

A year and a half ago my wife and I arranged a legal separation. I didn't demand a divorce, though I had plenty of cause, for the sake of our little daughter at that time aged six. I allow the child to stay with her mother, just because I'm a fool I suppose, and old-fashioned. But I know the environment is the worst possible for my beloved little girl.

Her mother's whole idea for the child is clothes, a permanent wave, even facials for her baby face, and the underthings she buys for her (pink satin, lace-trimmed) look to me as if they were intended for "ladies of the evening".

When my little daughter comes to see me once a week, her whole talk is about clothes, parties, even cocktails which she laps up if any dregs are left in the glasses after her mother's parties. No influence could be worse for a most gifted child.

I don't want to re-open this question of the separation again, but I feel I'm not doing right by the child who has a fine mind which should be cultivated. She should be given a chance to grow mentally instead of being taken to style shows and lapping up the dregs of cocktails.

I like your column because you don't sob. What do you suggest?

W. J. K.

I wonder if your trouble is an excess of patience or if, without realizing it, the fate of your little daughter presents too much fret and anxiety to re-open. It's so easy to let dreadful things just slide. Please don't lose a moment without consulting the best lawyer you can afford. At least the child could be put in a good boarding school. Mothers such as you describe have no maternal instinct. Their children are an extension of their own vanity. The case recalls that gruesome horror story by Henry James "The Turn of the Screw".

O.K. If Your Parents Are Willing

Dear Miss Fairfax,

Would it be proper for a seventeen-year old girl to go on an outing with another girl and two boys of the same age? This hike would be in the afternoon, and we were not planning on taking a chaperon.

Jane

If your parents are willing, I see no objection to your going on the outing, even if you go unchaperoned. That lady seems definitely out of the picture these days.

Scarlet Fever

I saved this one of the common eruptive contagious diseases of children which we have been discussing here this week until the last, because it is the one to be feared most, particularly at this time of the year when children's constitutions are likely to be weakened by winter conditions and probably by colds.

"It's better to be safe than sorry", is an old saying that I particularly commend to parents in regard to colds and digestive disturbances which, because they are so common in childhood, may be regarded too lightly. Measles starts as a bad cold, whooping cough begins like an ordinary cold in the head, and scarlet fever starts with a sore throat or tonsilitis. Fever is a warning of all. For this reason it is always wise to isolate promptly any child developing a fever and to have a doctor examine him.

For most of the diseases mentioned in this series this week, serums and vaccines have been developed that immunize the child or minimize the sickness, and the diseases are becoming rarer. But scarlet fever remains as a big menace to childhood.

This disease affects the some regions of the body as diphtheria out in no other respect do the diseases resemble each other. The onset of scarlet fever is much more dramatic than in diphtheria which a child may have in advanced stages before it is noticed by the parents. The high fever, sore throat and perhaps chills accompanying the first stage of scarlet fever leave no doubt that the child is very sick.

An examination of the throat at this stage will show that it is very red and swollen, but there are no patches of the thick, dirty grey membrane that always identifies diphtheria.

Early in the onset of scarlet fever a characteristic rash should make its appearance. It should pretty well cover the body, making its appearance first on the trunk. The rash is very fine and red and when you run your hand over it, it has a raised, velvety feel. Apart from this rash, there is often little in the symptoms to distinguish scarlet fever from any other sore throat.

However, sometimes scarlet fever comes without a rash or with a rash so fine as to be hardly perceptible and it may not be seen by the parent. Here an experienced sense of smell helps the doctor in his diagnosis for while scarlet fever without the rash might resemble diphtheria in some ways, the odors of the two diseases are entirely different. Diphtheria has a very characteristic odor that I can detect the minute I walk into a sick room. Scarlet fever has only a fever smell. Scarlet fever is extremely infectious and a child who comes in contact with it will develop the symptoms within four or five days if he is susceptible to it. The infectious character of the disease continues for long periods, so quarantine is always for four weeks or longer.

The rash itself may disappear after a couple of days and it leaves the skin with a peculiar lacey pattern. This is due to the peeling of the outer layers of the skin. In areas where the skin is hard and calloused, such as on the soles of the feet and the palms of the hand, the skin peels off in large chunks.

In my practise here in this part of Ontario, I have seen many deaths from scarlet fever. In almost every case the disease was fatal only because it struck at a time when the child's vitality was low. To repeat, this is a time of the year to devote extra attention to building up a child's system to withstand colds and diseases."

Etiquette Notes From Here and There

Notes on recent weddings: At all the weddings I've been to in the past few weeks, I found myself wondering what we ever did in the days before pert flower hats were in such high fashion. Few styles have ever been so decorative and becoming to bridal attendants as are these snug-fitting flower hats. Many guests at weddings wear them these days, even topping fur coats! Smart little varicolored tiny-feathered hats are popular too. At a large wedding last Saturday many perky white straw sailors, usually with flowers blooming on them, were worn with fur coats.

Bowls of white freesia, or white freesia combined with starry bouvardia, are exquisitely harmonious companions to the bride's cake on the bridal table. White camellias make a lovely bridal bouquet, especially for the brunette bride. Sometimes, when the bride carries white camellias, the bridal attendants carry pink camellias. A dramatic effect is achieved by having the bride's dress copied in colors for her attendants. Then the attendants wear short veils of tulle of the same color as their dresses.

I like the story of Maribel Vinson's savior faire. When this skating champion was sixteen, she fell on the ice during a command performance before the English royal family. With complete social as well as professional self-control—even at sixteen and a command performance!— she calmly took her bow from a sitting position in the centre of the rink. Her quick-wittedness changed the laugh that might have been at her to one that was with her.

It's not easy to find an original idea in birthday cards. But I came across a clever card this week that has attached to it a package of four-leaf clover seed. The birthdayer is supposed to plant the seeds—and you know what four-leaf clovers mean!

On the opening night of the Metropolitan Opera in New York and at other formal evening occasions at the beginning of this year's social season, many women wore long, white gloves with their evening gowns. It looked as if it would be a long-white-glove season. But as the season progressed, the popularity of this formal detail waned, although the popularity for long, colored gloves to match or to harmonize with the color of the gown kept a certain degree of popularity.

There are certain types of women, of all ages, who wear these white evening gloves with an air of distinction. To other types they add a "matronly" look, sometimes a look of forbidding formality. Some women shy away from wearing them because they hid their lovely rings and bracelets.

And speaking of long, white evening gloves, were you impressed or depressed by the supposed-to-be-impressing news that a few of the Hollywood "glamour" girls are keeping on their gloves while they partake of the evening's refreshments?

The coat-room attendants at the seventh annual Butlers' staff Ball (attended by 3000 butlers, chefs, footmen and maids) held recently in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Commodore in New York, reported that the tips given them by these guests, who certainly know what's what in tips, were far above the average tips they receive!

Ground-Hog Drafted In Cancer War

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

GROUND-HOG DAY had some medical significance this year. A great many ground-hogs did not have to come out on February 2 because they were already taken out and being used in laboratories to study the process of hibernation.

I spoke a few weeks ago on the researches that are being done by the use of low temperature in cases of cancer. The body heat of patients with cancer is brought down by ice packs to 80 degrees or 70 edgrees F., and in many instances severe cases of cancer are relieved and apparently improved.

Of course, doctors are wondering just what the mechanism is that causes this improvement.

A possible analogy is found in the treatment states (dementia praecox) by the use of insulin. Insulin, of course, reduces the sugar in the blood and it is theoretically supposed that the insulin deprives the brain of sugar. We know that the brain cells utilize only sugar and oxygen in their nutritional processes. They do not use protein. It has been supposed that when the brain cells are deprived of these two elements, the brain in some way on a new functional track, which is the cause of the improvement.

Deprived of Food?

Applying this idea to cancer cells and the freezing treatment, the question is whether cancer cells are deprived by cold of food substances which they need. We know that in the hibernating animal, all the sugar in the body accumulates in the liver. Apparently that is why they go to sleep. The brain is deprived of its necessary sugar. All functional processes decline. A ground-hog, or woodchuck, during hibernation will have a body temperature as low as 40 degrees F. It is theoretically possible for human beings to be reduced to this level. It so, the sugar in the body may be choked off from body cells and cancer cells, deprived of this nutritive material, disintegrate.

When the ground-hog wakes up naturally from his winter sleep, he has the "shakes" like a person with palsy for several hours; this also indicates lack of sugar in the tissues.

At any rate, the humble ground-hog is being used for experimental purposes to see if it can throw light on the mechanism of the new freezing treatment.

TREATING ARTHRITIS WITH BILE SALTS

What do conservative doctors think of the treatment of arthritis with bile salts?

The treatment is too new to allow of any definite pronouncement, pro or con. The idea of the treatment began with the observation by Hench, of the Mayo Clinic, that when patients with arthritis developed jaundice, a prompt and dramatic relief of symptoms occurred. This was also true of certain cases of neuralgia, such as sciatica. About two-thirds of the patients were relieved temporarily and about one-third were less markedly but somewhat relieved. The relief lasted for varying priods, in some cases a month or two and in some three or four years. The average period of relief was four months.

These observations furnished an obvious hint for treatment and the use of bile salts for arthritis was begun. The best method of using the bile salts is by vein.

Thompson and Wyatt, of Tucson, Arizona, reported this year on several patients who were given injections of bile salts by vein. Relief in symptoms of arthritis occurred from this artificial jaundice as it did in natural jaundice. The relief lasts for several weeks and a second course of treatment results in another period of relief.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

M.H.—"Will you please answer in your column and tell me if there is anything that will dissolve kidney stones?"

Answer: Nothing.

D.L.M., "Will enlarged tonsils affect the sight and hearing, and is there any danger of their becoming cancerated?"

Answer— Sight, no effect; hearing, possibly. Tonsils are not subject to cancer.

J.H., "What is the cause and treatment of cold and sweating feet?"

Answer—The cause is some disturbance of the automatic nervous system. Treatment is by soaking the feet morning and night in a solution of formalin (teaspoonful to a quart of water), and by contrast foot baths—alternating dipping the feet in a bucket of very hot and then very cold water for 20 minutes morning and night.

Major Beauty Trifles

VIRGINIA BRUCE . . remembers the trifles necessary for real beauty

By HELEN FOLLETT

TREMENDOUS trifles have to do with smart appearence. A button that hangs by a thread is a sartorial crime. Lipstick pigment that wanders over the while flesh is an offense to the fastidious eye. Twisted stocking seams; how men hate 'em! They make a girl look sloppy. Run-over heels are worse than all the others.

Girls who are not as chummy with the bath tub as they should be have dingy complexions. When the hair has skidded past the regular shampoo date, everybody knows it. Hair shaft cling together, ringlets are stringy. Finger-nails must be kept in form, neatly ovaled at the eaves, not just camouflaged with the ruby shimmer.

Dusting powders should be used after the bath, so there's no danger of developing the terrible B.O. Soiled gloves and hankies that have served their time place a girl among those who are careless about grooming. Rips in coat linings and coats that need brushing aren't anything to write home about.

Good grooming is possible for every girl; doesn't cost anything, but does a heap to place her in the ranks of the good lookers.

Oily complexions keep the old powder pads busy and the pads don't seem to accomplish much. Sebaceous geysers go right on spouting. Get the upper hand of them by eating green salads and other vegetables, especially spinach and carrots. Drink plenty of water.

Every night after washing the face sponge the skin surface with a soda solution, one teaspoonful of baking soda to a cup of water. Every morning use tepid water, dry the flesh gently and apply witch hazel with a bit of cotton.

Select a dry, light powder, not one with an oily base which will enrage the glands and make them have tantrums.

Giving Fish a Chance to Please

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

THE LENTEN SEASON gives the housewife the opportunity to demonstrate her skill and ingenuity in planning and preparing meatless meals. It gives folks a chance to become acquainted with fish, and to discover how nutritious, satisfying and delicious seafood can be.

Panned Weakfish is delicious and easy to prepare. Use small weakfish and season with salt and pepper. Spread one side liberally with mayonnaise that has a good oil base. Put mayonnaise side down on hot frying pan. Cook until brown. Spread other side with mayonnaise and turn. Cook till brown. Fish is then ready to serve.

Boiled Weakfish

Boiled Weakfish calls for one celery root, one onion, sprig parsley, three good-sized weakfish, water, teaspoon vinegar, three hard-boiled eggs, one cup sweet cream, two tablespoons flour, two tablespoons cold milk, 12 blanched almonds and one tablespoon chopped parsley. Place minced celery root, onion and parsley in a kettle. Wrap the fish in cheesecloth and lay it on the vegetables. Pour in enough boiling water to cover and add vinegar (the vinegar tends to keep the fish firm). Simmer just below the boiling point until tender, allowing six to eight minutes to each pound. In the meantime, hard-boil two eggs. Drain fish and place on a hot platter and prepare the following sauce: Heat sweet cream in a saucepan. Blend flour with cold milk; add to cream, stirring until smooth. Boil about one minute, stirring constantly; pour over the fish. Stick almonds into the fish, points up. Shell the eggs, chop the whites and the yolks separately; garnish the fish first with a row of chopped yolks, then of whites, until all are used. Lay chopped parsley around the platter.

A piquant vegetable salad makes a good separate course with a fish dinner. Here's one of our favorites. We make it with a tablespoon gelatin, one-half cup boiling water, tablespoon lemon juice, teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, one-fourth cup sugar, one-half teaspoon salt, three-fourths cups finely-shredded cabbage, one-half cup diced celery, two tablespoons chopped pimiento, one-half cup each small cooked peas and cooked green beans, and one-half cup mayonnaise. Soften gelatin in cold water. Add boiling water, lemon juice, Worcestershire sauce, sugar and salt. Cool slightly. Add chilled cabbage and celery and remaining ingredients in order given. Turn into mold. Chill until firm in automatic refrigerator. Unmold on crisp lettuce. Garnish with additional mayonnaise. Serves six.

SOUTH-GOING clothes are pretty rather than startling. The play suit with a dirndl-type skirt is popular and is especially good in striped silk broadcloth. Bath suits with matching jackets lined in white terry toweling are also used as play dresses. Bathing suits on princess lines are everywhere, and, of course, the bra and shorts costume with bare midriff continues to be the choice of slim young things. Striped fabrics for afternoon things lead this year, and jersey is the fabric.

Safe Truck Drivers Honored

Safety League Extends Work Throughout Province

Fourteen hundred of Ontario's safest truck drivers were entertained by their employers at a banquet in Toronto Friday night. This annual affair was held under the auspices of the Ontario Safety League. The principal speaker was the Honourable Mitchell Hepburn. These drivers have records of from one to ten year's driving without accident of any kind.

RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT OF SAFETY LEAGUE

A. G. Partridge, Toronto, continues as President of the Ontario Safety League during 1940. The annual report of the society revealed its extensive work in teaching safe practises in every walk of life. During 1939 an aggressive campaign was directed to pedestrians with a resulting lowering of accident figures.

Mr. A. G. Partridge, was elected president for a second time at the immediately preceding annual meeting it was revealed that the Ontario Safety League's activities touch people in all walks of life... workers in home and factory, motorists, pedestrians, cyclists, railwaymen and school children. The general manager said in part:

At least 100,000 persons are killed and injured by accidents in the Province of Ontario annually. Of this number, approximately 3,000 lose their lives outright. The remaining 97,000 suffering more or less serious injuries. Of this number it is conservatively estimated that twenty per rent receive permanent disabilities.

School Activities.

The League's school safety educational campaign continues to improve steadily. Owing to the cessation of our provincial government grant in 1935, this work was discontinued entirely during 1936. By placing this service on a near self-supporting basis, we were able to bring our safety motion picture and lecture service to 20,000 school children in 1937. For the year 1938, we reached 80,000 school children, and in 1939, we brought our safety educational service to 121,250 school children, an increase of more than 50 per cent over the preceding year.

Other activities included circularizing all the larger employers of bicycle riders in Toronto and the surrounding district, calling upon them to co-operate with the League in its effort to have cyclists obey traffic regulations, and otherwise disport themselves with some consideration for the elementary principles of Safety. We received a number of favourable replies to this letter.

The League entered into a co-operative ararngement with the Junior Section of the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, and the Toronto Police Department for an intensive Pedestrian Safety Campaign in Toronto from December 16th, 1939 to January 2nd, 1940. An excellent programme was arranged by these three organizations and it was carried out to the last detail. The net result being 71 less traffic accidents as compared with the same period in the previous year.

Our co-operative arrangement with both of our national railway systems continues, and during the course of the year we handled 289 complaints of unsafe practices at railway crossings. In each case a letter was sent to the alleged offender and his explanation sent on to the railway laying the complaint.

We are represented on the Approvals Committee of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, whereby all new electrical designs or inventions are submitted to your representative for approval of their safety features.

Conservatives Hold Political Rally At Springbrook

Madoc, Feb. 26 (Special).—With an attendance of nearly 500 the Conservative Association of the Township of Rawdon had a most successful political rally and social evening in the Orange Hall in Springbrook, Saturday night. The rally was in the interest of George S. White of Madoc, National Conservative candidate for Hastings-Peterboro.

The meeting was under the chairmanship of Mr. Volney Richardson, president of the Township Association. Mr. Richardson expressed a welcome to the large audience, and referred to the dictatorship form of government under Premier King.

A splendid musical program was given by Misses Betty, Jean and Coleen Haggerty and Glen Haggerty of Ivanhoe, Misses Keene, Miss Richardson of Stirling, Mr. Baker of Bonarlaw, and Mr. William Hawthorne and Miss Margaret White of Madoc.

Short addresses were given by Canon Swayne of Bonarlaw, who dealt with a free parliament and freedom of speech.

Mr. Harry Rollins, president of the Belleville Conservative Association, spoke briefly and appealed to the younger voters to interest themselves in the political life of the country.

Dealt With Legislature.

Mr. R. D. Arnott, K.C., M.P.P. was introduced by Reeve William West of Stirling. Mr. Arnott reviewed in detail the matters leading up to the vote of censure in the Ontario House and other provincial matters.

Mr. George S. White, National Conservative candidate for Hastings-Peterboro was introduced by Mr. George Thompson of Springbrook, ex-Warden of Hastings County. Mr. White made a slashing attack on the feeble effort of the King government in the matter of clothing, equipment, arms and defensive weapons, and the matter of allowances to dependents of soldiers. Mr. White spoke of the National governments now in existence in England, France, Union of South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand. Mr. White pledged his support to the formation of a truly National government under Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion, and appealed to voters of all parties to support the National candidates so that national unity can be preserved and that Canada can make an united and full effort in the prosecution of the war.

Special Committees To Continue Work

Toronto, Feb. 26 —(CP)— Two special committees of the Ontario legislature will sit between now and the time the House meets for its next session.

The fourth session of the 20th assembly was wound up Saturday with a 20-minute sitting, at which a motion was passed enabling the committee inquiring into the administration of justice and the committee inquiring into administration of timber resources to continue their work.

Legislature members scattered to their ridings soon after the closing, most of them planning to take active parts in the Federal election campaign. The part of Premier Mitchell Hepburn in the Dominion battle remained uncertain, however.

The House was prorogued with little ceremony. Lieutenant-Governor Albert Matthews entered with two uniformed soldiers to read the Speech from the Throne, in which national unity was urged to further the Dominion's war effort. The speech asked that citizens accept cheerfully the economies necessitated by war.

MANION STATES 'BEST' LIBERALS

and Hon. Maurice Dupre, Solicitor-General in the Bennett Government, carried the Conservative effort while three cabinet ministers spoke for the government.

The Conservative leader said a number of the best Liberals, most of them outside the government, are ready to join him in a National government. Only three or four in the present cabinet would qualify under his "best brains" criterion.

Dr. Manion again raised the question of how the government spent the $188,000,000 appropriated for defence since 1935 and apparently refused to accept the explanation offered by Postmaster General Power in a Kingston, Ont., speech a week ago.

Canadian voters have to choose in the current election campaign between "a party government for the party" and the Conservative aid of "all for all to win the war", Mr. Dupre said at Quebec.

Says Government Runs Aground.

Speaking in a broadcast over a provincial hook-up, Mr. Dupre said that the people want "not only appeals for national unity, but daily bread."

"When it comes to national unity, conduct of the war and unemployment, the King government has run aground miserably," he said.

Although Premier Mackenzie King had called general elections for Mar. 26 apparently to bring about national unity, the real reason had been "to advance the affairs of his party," he said.

When the Bennett government was in power, the Liberals "accused us of being manufacturers of cannon fodder," he said. "Today, Mr. Power (Postmaster-General C. F. Power) accuses us of not having spent enough."

Gardiner Answers Critics

Agriculture Minister Gardiner answered critics of the Dominion government's war effort in a speech at a Liberal convention at Guelph which chose R. W. Gladstone, member of the last House, as the Liberal candidate in Wellington south.

The Minister of Agriculture declared that since the war started $315,000,000 has been expended and by the end of the first year of the war half a billion dollars will have been spent in prosecuting the war "side by side with Britain and France."

He said: "This year we ask you to spend $500,000,000 in the first year of the war. Then I ask you: Do you think we are going fast enough?"

Answering the charge that Canada was not properly prepared for the war Mr. Gardiner said the only way that Canada could have been more ready was by larger expenditures during the years preceding 1939.

Euler Again Named

Hon. W. D. Euler, Minister of Trade and Commerce, said at Waterloo, Ont., that if the Dominion administration is returned at the election March 26 the Federal government will introduce a scheme for unemployment insurance. The convention named Mr. Euler to contest Waterloo north for the seventh straight time.

"Each province has the power to enact unemployment insurance legislation but none of them have seen fit to do so," Mr. Euler said. "We of the Federal government, however, believe it is a national problem and intended to put through a bill at the last session. But, as you all know, it was too short."

Recalling that the last Conservative government did bring in an unemployment insurance measure, the Minister said it "did not hold water from a legal standpoint because the matter is under the jurisdiction of each province." The government had hopes, he said, of obtaining the consent of the provinces to pass the proposed measure.

No Conscription Promised

Mr. Euler expressed hope that conscription never would become an issue in a Canadian election as in the first Great War and declared that "under the Mackenzie King administration, there never will be conscription in the country."

Canada is "perhaps the only country in the world that has a transportation system adequate for war requirements, transport minister Howe said at Moncton.

The minister said the railways are an example of Canada's fundamental preparedness for war. Before the war, a survey was made to determine what improvements were required to handle traffic at war levels.

The survey indicated that additional rolling stock was needed by both transcontinental railways. One of the first orders placed by the War Purchasing Board was one for $25,000,000 worth of locomotives and freight cars for both railroads.

Mr. Howe said the policies of the present government played an important part in the present ability of the railways to meet war requirements. In the Maritimes, the introduction of a system of centralized traffic control for the Canadian National Railways will increase the capacity of one line by 50 per cent, "which should meet requirements for the duration of the war."

A survey made before the outbreak of the war showed that without further development the harbors were capable of caring for all the traffic the railways could deliver to them.

which inflicts considerable losses of human life and of economic value of neutral states, when they maintain their shipping in order to keep up their legitimate and necessary trade."

The conferees—Dr. Peter Munch of Denmark, Halvdan Koht of Norway and Christian Gunther of Sweden "agreed to maintain the inviolability of neutral territory in accordance with the rules o finternational law."

Newspaper Comments

The Danish newspaper Nationaltidende, in commenting on the meeting, declared:

"It may be of importance in the future that they are agreed about firmer lines for mutual action both after violations of neutrality . . . and about mutual efforts to get concessions for their trade by belligerents."

Expressing the conviction that the longer the war lasts the more difficult will be chances for peace because of greater "embitterment between nations" the Ministers' communique said they would welcome any endeavor to initiate negotiations for a "just and permanent peace."

Even as the two-day conference ended Prime Minister Per Albin Hansson of Sweden broadcast from Stockholm a warning that Swedes not overlook the chance of being forced "to guard her (Sweden's) vital interests, freedom and independence with weapons in hand."

Hansson reiterated the government's determination to remain neutral in the Russo-Finnish conflict, but said that help for Finland is increasing in new forms in accordance with Sweden's non-intervention policy.

Gunther, the Swedish Foreign Minister, interviewed here, said the Foreign Ministers conference had not discussed the bombing of the Swedish town of Pajala on the Finnish border last week. Swedes have declared the bombing the work of Russian bombing planes but the Russians have denied it.

Danish newspapers printed reports from Finland that two captured Russian pilots had admitted participating in the bombing when they lost their way.

Norway continued attempts to settle her dispute with Britain over the Altmark case by offering to arbitrate the matter, if a solution could not be reached through direct negotiation.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Yateman, 4th line, Mr. E. W. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Casey and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Easton were guests on Thursday of Mr. and Mrs. George Hamilton and family.

Mrs. Wm. Doxtator and Mrs. Frank Walker spent Thursday with Mrs. Wm. Clarke.

Several ladies from this line attended the W. M. S. meeting on Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Bruce Martin, 4th line.

The weekly meeting of the Bethany Y. P. U. was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Walker on Tuesday evening Feb. 20.

The meeting opened with quiet music and the Call to Worship. Hymn 34 was sung followed by prayer. Bessie Walker read the Scripture after which business was discussed. Hymn 31 closed this part of the meeting.

Russell Ritz then took charge. Hymn 12 was sung and Mrs. A. Miller gave the topic. Bessie Walker gave an instrumental followed by a reading by Fred Cleave. Reta Clarke favored with an instrumental and Arthur Treverton read a poem. A debate was then given, "Resolved that the city is more dependent on the country than the country is on the city", which was won by the negative side. Lunch was served and the enjoyable evening was brought to a close.

married, a resident of Ottawa. He is charged with distributing literature contrary to Section 39A of the Defence of Canada Regulations.

Louis Binder is unmarried and 21 years old. He was in uniform when arrested and is said to have been on a 12-hour leave from his unit. He is charged with printing and distributing.

Saunders, in whose apartment a multigraphing machine and type from which copies of the pamphlet had apparently been printed were found, is 26 years old and married.

Louis Binder was seen entering the apartment and leaving shortly afterwards in a taxi-cab with a suitcase. He was stopped and the suitcase was found to contain some 5,000 copies of the paphlet. As police entered the apartment Saunders and a woman were found hiding parts of the multigraphing machine in a baby carriage.

Type is Found

They also found type used in printing the pamphlet and type on the machine for stickers carrying such slogans as "end the war, Vote Communist," "Repeal the War Measures Act," "Mark your ballot—peace, against grafters."

The pamphlet was similar in its general tone to one headed "Save Canada from catastrophe" which has already been widely distributed by the Communist party.

It was related definitely to the present election campaign and appealed to voters to vote for Communist candidates and in constituencies where there were no Communist candidates to write the word "peace" on the ballots.

"Do not believe the lying war propaganda against the Soviet Union," it said, "the Imperialists inevitably seek to transform the Inter-Imperialistic War into a war against the one country where capitalism has been overthrown, where Socialism has been built, where exploiters are no more."

It said the Finns assisted their Imperialist front by opening up a second front and threatening Leningrad, the centre of one fourth of Soviet Russia's industry.

AVOID the Last Minute RUSH

Boston Bruins Lose Ground When They Meet Defeat by Leafs, Hawks Over Weekend

Defeated Each Time by 3-1 and Are Now Four Points Behind Rangers

RANGERS WIN

Canadiens Downed 6-2 at N.Y.—Detroit Red Wings Smother Amerks by 4-1

(By Jack Calder, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Hockey's toughest assignment is the cruel National League double-header that sends a club into action at Toronto Saturday night and 500 miles away at Chicago Sunday.

Toronto Maple Leafs play wide open, forceful hockey and Chicago Black Hawks skate like mad all over the ice to check their opponents dizzy. Ten times the feat of winning in the two cities on consecutive nights has been attempted this season and no team has accomplished it yet.

Boston Bruins, tied with New York Rangers for first place when they started, tried the Toronto-Chicago suicide leap this past weekend and couldn't have done worse. The Maple Leafs whipped them 3-1 before 13,708 customers at Toronto Saturday, the Black Hawks beat them by the same score before a season's record crowd of 18,096 at Chicago last night, and the Bruins were left four points behind the roaring Rangers.

Marker and Langelle Score

Two 32-year-old wingmen struck the most telling blows in the Bruin disaster. Gus Marker fired Toronto's first two goals and Johnny Gottselig got Chicago's first two, while their team tied up the high-scoring Boston sauerkraut line of Milt Schmidt, Bobby Bauer and Woody Dumart.

Pete Langelle, who had helped Toronto's first two goals, was aided by Marker and Horner in completing the scoring. Flash Hollett scored for Boston.

The throng at Chicago saw the same kind of scoring parade. Gottselig sent the Hawks ahead in the sixth minute and Captain Dit Clapper of the Bruins tied the score late in the opening period. Gottselig shot his second goal early in the third and George Allen finished off the upset.

Chicago has gone nine straight games without defeat, to cling five points behind the third - place Leafs, Toronto is another seven points back of Boston.

Rangers Hold 4-Point Lead

The Rangers, who have played three games more than the Bruins assumed their four-point lead by defeating the Canadiens twice, 2-0 at Montreal Saturday and 6-2 at New York last night.

Goalie Dave Kerr registered his seventh shutout of the campaign at Montreal, while Bryan Hextall and Alex Shibicky potted the goals in the second and third periods. It was the introduction of Mike Karakas, Chicago's property, to the Canadiens' goaltending job.

Karakas, replacing the injured Wilf Cude, had a harder night at New York. Hextall potted the first two Ranger goals before 12 minutes had passed and Shibicky made the score 3-0 in the 14th minute.

Cliff Goupille scored for the visitors late in the first period but the Ranger parade went right ahead in the second, Mac Colville and Babe Pratt scoring. Dutch Hiller wound up the Ranger total in the third and George Mantha got a meaningless Canadien goal in the last minute.

Wings Defeat Amerks

Despite the double defeat, the last-place Canadiens remained well in the fight for the six play-off positions. The Red Wings defeated New York Americans 4-1 at Detroit last night and the Canadiens were left five points back of the sixth-place Americans, who have played one more game than their Montreal rivals.

Captain Ebbie Goodfellow gained an assist on each of the Detroit goals, which were scored by Syd Howe, Connie Brown, Cecil Dillon and Alex Motter. Art Chapman sank the Americans' counter after three Detroit goals were in.

KELLY'S RINK WINS ROYAL YORK AND AGGREGATE

Granite Quartette Scores 13 Wins and Two Losses in Ontario Bonspiel

SUCCESSFUL EVENT

Campbell's Rink from Hamilton Wins Seiberling Trophy from Lindsay Four

Toronto, Feb. 26—(CP)— Presenting the Royal York trophy to Dan Kelly's crack Toronto Granite Club rink Saturday night, George Stronach, Chairman of the Ontario Bonspiel, called the quartet "one of the finest units ever developed in Ontario." Kelly's men defeated Douglas Storms' foursome 14-11 in an all-Granite final for the Bonspiel's most coveted award.

Kelly's record during the past two years indicated Stronach's statement was no exaggeration. Besides winning the Royal York event, the champions became the first rink ever to win the grand aggregate two years in succession, posting 13 victories against two defeats. Last year they lost their first match, and then ran out an amazing string of 12 straight wins and won the NoNrth American and Seagram trophies.

Previously this year, the Granite four copped the Canada Life trophy for the Toronto city championship, the Thauburn Memorial at the Toronto High Park Curling Club an dthe Goodrich trophy at Kitchener. The rink is composed of A. J. MacDonald, lead; F. E. Graham, second; H. W. Allan, vice-skip and Kelly, skip.

Losers Rally

After a disastrous seven, notched by Kelly on the sixth end, Storms' less experienced quartet rallied to give the winners a real battle for the trophy. They won the next four ends, scoring two, three, two and one, squaring the match at 11-all.

Kelly won the 11th end with one, but the issue was still in doubt until the final shot of the 12th end. Kelly had placed two stones in and Storms, with last shot, had a chance to knock them both out. He just missed the narrow opening between the two guards.

Gordon Campbell's Hamilton Thistles carried off the Seiberling trophy in the other final played Saturday night. Campbell defeated Percy Skitch's Lindsay stanemen 11-7. The game was tied seven-all going into the 11th end, but Campbell scored two on each of the last two ends.

Alex Hayes' Sarnia four, which won the Royal York last year in a final with Skitch's rink, was eliminated in the first round Monday.

TRAINING CAMP BRIEFS

By the Associated Press

Clearwater, Fla.—Dolph Camilli's ears should be burning out in California today. President Larry MacPhail of the Brooklyn Dodgers didn't mince words in informing everybody within range (roughly a half a mile) that the chunky first baseman could stay on his ranch forever before he would get a contract for more than $15,000.

Lakeland, Fla.—Rudy York has a philosophical slant about his transfer by the Detroit Tigers from catching to first base.

"You can't call the wrong pitch on first base," he said today.

York and Hank Greenberg, who gave up first base and went to the outfield so Rudy could play regularly, are in camp early.

St. Petersburg, Fla. — Four consecutive world championships haven't dulled the enthusiasm of the New York Yankees. Tt was disclosed today, as the champs opened camp, that pitchers Vernon Gomez and Johnny Murphy had to be restrained officially to keep them from starting training last week. The club passed a rule that no player could work out before Manager Joe McCarthy arrived.

Tampa, Fla.—Lee Grissom, the southpaw pitcher the Cincinnati Reds traded to the Yankees, taunted his former teammates as he passed through here to his new headquarters.

"What a mistake the Reds made in trading me to the Yankees," he declared. "I'm going to be bearing down against Cincinnati everytime I face them in an exhibition game. My arm feels great."

SYRACUSE STARS DOWN IN CELLAR

Springfield Indians Win 6-3 After Stars Had Twice Knotted Count

By the Canadian Press

When they really set their minds to it, Springfield Indians can break up a hockey game about as fast as any team in the International-American Hockey League. They did just that last night, and spoiled the evening for Syracuse fans.

It was as close a game as could be wished for until the last three minutes of play, with the Stars coming from behind three times to knot the count. The Indians really hit their stride and when it was all over the score was 6-3, and the Stars were down in the cellar of the Western Division.

Pat Egan climaxed a passing bout with Kaminsky and Schultz to fire the winning goal at 17:04. Just to show there was no mistake, Lloyd Jackson fired in a couple more in the last two minutes.

It was the second win in as many nights for Indians, who defeated Indianapolis 4-1 Saturday night. New Haven eked out a 2-2 win over Indianapolis last night after dropping a 7-4 decision to Philadelphia Ramblers the night before.

Pittsburgh Hornets moved to within three points of the Capitals, however, with two clean-cut victories over Cleveland Barons. They trounced the Barons 6-1 Saturday night, and followed up with a 4-2 victory last night.

Hershey Bears was the other team to come up with a double victory in weekend competition. They trounced the hapless Syracuse squad 4-1 Saturday night, and then came from behind to upset Providence Reds 5-4 last inght.

McGILL CAN TIE TORONTO VARSITY

(By The Canadian Press)

A challenger has plotted a difficult course to cut across the path University of Toronto is following toward the championship of the International Intercollegiate Hockey League.

The challenger is none other than McGill University, champion of the college loop since its organization and its course is hazardous because its success depends on beating the Torontonians who not only haven't lost a game yet this season but already have turned back the Redmen once.

Four points behind the Blues who lead the loop, McGill can pull even by victories in its two remaining games, one against Queen's University and the other with Toronto.

The league-leaders can stay the challenge by taking a victory or even a draw out of that last game with McGill.

The Redmen gained undisputed possession of second place and their chance to even things with Toronto by defeating Dartmouth College, 3-0 at Hanover Saturday.

It looked for a time as though they would achieve neither. Dartmouth, occupant of sixth place in the seven-team circuit held McGill scoreless for better than two periods with an impregnable defence.

The Redmen found their way to the goal at 9:45 of the last frame when Ralph Keefer got a pass from Howie Walker and beat Lapres in the Dartmouth goal. Less than a minute later Keefer passed to Walker who got another count.

Grant Morrison scored again for McGill on a play with Cam Dickinson about seven minutes from the end of the game. It was the only Intercollegiate contest of the week-end.

WIDEN ZONE OF INTERFERENCE TO FIVE YARDS

But Backs Cannot Block Behind or in Front of the Line at Anytime

GIVEN TILL APRIL 1

Playoff Between East and West May be Abandoned if West Does Not Adopt Code

Toronto, Feb. 26 (CP)— Western Canada football has been warned to adopt the rules of the Canadian Rugby Union by April 1 or surrender the right to send a team east for the National senior final.

The C.R.U. decided at its annual meeting Saturday that the Western Interprovincial Union no longer may play under its own set of rules during the season and then send a team to compete in the Dominion playoff under the National organization's code. Two years ago the C.R.U. inserted a footnote in its constitution to enable the west to carry on under its own rules until 1940.

"Let's take a stand on this thing," Eastern delegaten demanded at the annual.

The Rules Committee made a "concession" to the west by widening the zone of running interference from three yards to five, or half the width of the western interference limit, but refused to let backs block behind the line or come ahead of line to block. That is an essential line to block. That is an essential feature of the western game of running interference.

But W. C. Foulds, Chairman of the committee, said the change to five yards would be conditional only upon acceptance of "all rules and regulations of the C.R.U." by the Western Interprovincial Union. If the west doesn't signify its willingness to adopt the C.R.U. code by April 1, the three-yard interference limit will prevail again.

Means Death of Playoff

Joe Ryan, Manager of the Dominion champion Winnipeg Blue Bombers, said the C.R.U.'s decision probably meant the death of the east-west playoff, for "our people are sold on the idea of broad running interference and I don't see how we could afford to give it up."

The Rules Committee stuck determinedly to the policy of an essentially Canadian game by giving a new lease on life to the old signal-barking method of calling plays. Now only three huddles will be allowed a team within a single quarter of a game. The quarterback will bark the signals from play formation the rest of the time.

Another rule change grants the team against which a touchdown is scored the option of kicking off or receiving. Formerly the team scored upon was forced to kick off.

Two players may be substituted twice within one period under another revision, fashioned as an attempt to reduce the practice of treating injured players on the field and to give coaches a chance to determine the extent of players' injuries before they are allowed to continue playing.

The west did score a point or two. One was the election of J. E. Bannerman of Calgary as President. Another was the stipulation that the 1940 east-west final, if one is played, will be staged at Varsity stadium in Toronto or upon a neutral ground chosen by the C.R.U. executive if Varsity stadium is not available.

BELCHER FORCED TO TIE RECORD BY BILL FRITZ

Tricolor Star Finisher Second in 600-Yard Race at N. Y. Games

O'CONNOR SECOND

Canadian Hurdler Forces Tomlich to Record in 70-Yards Hurdles

New York, Feb. 26—(CP)—Canada's two challengers for assorted titles in the United States indoor track circuit aren't setting any records themselves these days, but they are gaining the distinction of pushing others to new marks.

Probably sprinter Bill Fritz of Queen's University and Toronto's Larry O'Connor aren't cheering about it, but the two former Olympic games stars are forcing plenty of records for the other fellows.

Fritz put on a great spurt last night at the U.S. amateur athletic union's indoor track and field meet's 600-yard dash but succeeded only in driving Charley Belcher of Atlanta, Ga., to a meet record of 1:11.6 while he wound up second. Belcher finished three yards in front of the Queen's star who spurted past Johnny Quigley of Manhattan College in the stretch.

Larry O'Connor pressed Allan Tolmich of Detroit to a record in the 70-yards hurdles at 8.4 seconds, 1-10 second off the meet and indoor mark for the event.

It was the second time in a week that Tolmich had been forced to record time to beat the Toronto star. Last Saturday he set a national indoor record of 7.1 in turning back O'Connor in the 60-yards hurdles.

Otherwise the meet was highlighted by Greg Rice's amazing 13:55.9 for three miles and the first United States national title for Chuck Fenske, who won his sixth straight mile race in the meet record time of 4:08.8.

Tail-End Teams Fatten Their Scoring Averages

Montreal, Feb. 26—(CP)—With the pressure off the leaders in the Quebec Senior Hockey League race, the circuit's tail-end teams fattened their scoring averages in weekend games that wound up the regular schedule.

Verdun Maple Leafs, sure of third place, travelled to Ottawa Saturday and were beaten 13-5 by the Senators. The victory moved the Senators to within a point of the fourth place Cornwall Flyers and was their first in eight games.

At Quebec yesterday, the tail-end aces drubbed the leading Montreal Royals 7-2. In both games the playoff teams used junior players, giving their regulars a rest for the elimination series that start here Wednesday when Verdun and Montreal Concordia meet in the first game of a best-of-five games semi-final series.

Quebec's other senior circuit, the provincial league, neared the end of its regular schedule yesterday when the leading Sherbrooke Red Raiders beat St. Hyacinthe Gaulois 7-4. Only two games remain to be played in this league, Verdun Bulldogs travelling to Boston for a pair of contests later this week.

Holdout time is here again with nearly 100 major league baseball players singing "We want more dough!" Heading the list is Dizzy Dean of the Cubs who is more or less familiar with this sort of thing. Diz received $20,000 last year; he is said to have been offered $10,000. He wants $15,000. A few of the others are pictured. Suhr is the only Philly holdout. Hamlin won 20 games for the Dodgers last year and probably will get what he wants. Ott, reportedly paid $20,000 in 1939, is said to have been asked to take a cut. Allen is disputing a bonus contract. Gordon is only one of many Yankee stars thinking in terms of bigger figures than offered.

CALLING 'EM

with Ken J. Colling

Just about two years ago now minor league hockey, as played in the Ontario Juvenile Hockey Association, was introduced into Belleville. That season the fans warmed up to the kids as they eliminated Cobourg, Kingston, and Peterboro, before being rubbed out in a sudden death semi-final game versus Oshawa and played right in the Motor City. Tonight at the Hume Arena juvenile hockey will again take the spotlight when Picton comes to town to meet the 1940 edition of the Belleville juveniles. The local team is composed, with two exceptions, of Belleville-born boys, who are anxious to learn the game and live in hopes of the day when they'll be playing senior hockey in Belleville. As Picton has a population of under 5,000 the Prince Edward County seat kids may use two O.H.A. players in accordance to the regulations of the O.J.H.A., thus Bill Dennis' Belleville kids will have to hustle tonight in order to gain a goal margin to haul into the return game.

By mutual agreement two referees will be used in the Picton-Belleville O. J. H. A. series, one from each town, Cliff Howie, who has been whistle-tooting in the City League all season will be the Belleville official, while Carmen Wellbanks, well known Picton defence player, will be the other referee. In order to acquaint the fans with the roster of both teams we obtained the respective line-ups of the clubs. Belleville has signed 15 players, of which 12 will appear tonight. The eligible locals are: Goal, Ted Clark; defence, Bill McBride, Ross Row, McGuire and Fitzgibbon; centres, Glen Robertson and Al Kellar; wings, Vern Goyer, Bruce May, Bruce Cronk, Bennett, Dick Barrett, Gene Rosebush and Stan Reid. Cook is Belleville sub goalie. Coach Bill Dennis did not announce which three of his squad would be sitting on the sidelines, however. As for the Picton team, they will line-up as follows: Goal, Hart; defence, Whattam, Ackerman; centre, Ken Frederick; wings Bob Frederick, Joe Sargent; subs Woodward, Scott, Evans, Bolton, M. Clapp.

The New York Americans, sometimes drubbed the Brooklyn Dodgers of the N.H.L., may eventually play their future professional hockey games in Flatbush if present plans of promoters are carried out. A Brooklyn-New York hockey feud would undoubtedly pay great dividends, as those Flatbush fans are of the most rabid type and once Brooklyn took the "Amazing Amerks" to their bosom, goodness knows to what heights the game might rise across the Harlem River. The "Ice Palace" in Brooklyn accommodates only 2,000 fans but already plans to enlarge the building are under way. Red Dutton, manager of the Americans, is ready to move his club from Madison Square Gardens, if he can obtain the approval of the N.H.L. However from this corner we believe the Madison Square Gardens is too closely hooked up with the hockey moguls of the major loop and would try to halt such a move. True enough the Americans don't draw any too well in the Gardens, but they might become a financial success in Brooklyn, which wouldn't ring any too well in the Garden's rafters.

Doug Runions, who launched his starry and colorful hockey career right here in Belleville but who is now playing for the Port Colborne senior O.H.A. club finished the season sixth in the "Sailors" scoring records. Runions played 24 games, scored 13 goals and had 13 assists for a scoring record of 26 points. Runions was second in penalties served by his club, as he spent 27 minutes in the "cooler" which included a major and misconduct penalty. Incidentally "Peanuts" O'Flaherty, of the Toronto Goodyears, led the senior O. H. A. scorers with 41 goals and 35 assists in 29 games played.

Do you remember when Babe Ruth signed a three-year contract as player, assistant manager and second vice-president of Boston Braves three years ago today after 15 seasons with the New York Yankees? The 41-year-old "King of Swat" returned to the city that hailed him as a great southpaw pitcher in 1914 but differences with the National League Club's executive led to the Babe being given his unconditional release only four months later.

You wouldn't exactly label a man who hit 33 homeruns as a slugging weakling but that record owned by Hank Greenberg in 1939 marks one of the big batting slumps of the past season. For in 1938 Hank hit 58 homers. That's a major slump. However, digging into history it reveals Joe Hauser hitting 63 in 1930 and only 31 the next season.

Joe "Ducky Wucky" Medwick, star outfielder of the St. Louis Cardinals, openly admitted he was a 1940 holdout. Without Medwick the Cards cannot expect to win the senior loop pennant and the only comment he would make yesterday was to say "I deserve a raise." No mention was made of the amount of the salary terms tendered Medwick by the Cardinals.

SPORT SPICE: Pete Beach's Albert College senior interscholastic pucksters beat Stirling High 8-1 Saturday in a test match . . . They meet Norwood High in the C.O.S.S.A. play-offs commencing this week . . . (Formerly of Thurlow)

Clipper Planes to Fly Direct to Portugal

New York, Feb. 26—(AP)—Delivery of uncensored mail to Europe solely through air channels appears likely as a result of an announcement of Pan-American Airways that its clipper planes will omit the Bermuda stop on flights to Portugal, starting March 15

The company made no mention of British contraband examination of mail at Bermuda which has caused criticism in some quarters in the United States. It gave as its reasons better weather conditions and the fact mid-Atlantic weather reports are being received from two United States coast guard vessels assigned to special duty.

The clippers thus return to their original route—direct across the Atlantic to Horta, the Azores—interrupted last October when they included Bermuda as a refuelling stop. Pan-American says the direct flight saves five hours.

Official air circles attached significance to the new policy which possibly may allow some American mail to reach Germany without Allied examination for contraband. Pan-American connects at Lisbon with Italian and French air lines. As yet, British air lines have not begun a Lisbon-London shuttle service to connect with the clippers.

The twice-a-week shuttle service of the company to Bermuda will not be affected.

The route of westbound flights, in which European mail bound for the United States is censored, continues as at present, the planes stopping at Bermuda.

Norwood Moves Into Next Round C.O.S.S.A. Playdowns

Tweed, Feb. 26 (Special)—Norwood high school advanced to the next round in the C.O.S.S.A. hockey playdowns by tying Tweed high school 2-2 in the former town on Saturday night. Winning the first game 7-5 in Tweed or Thursday night, Norwood captured the round 9-7. The classy Norwood outfit was called on to play its best hockey on Saturday to hold the visitors to a tie. Few visiting teams to Norwood are successful in either defeating or tying the homesters on their own ice, as the very large ice surface, second largest in Ontario, has them, literally, all at sea.

Despite this mental hazard, added to a two-goal deficit, Tweed boys showed their class and justification for being the representatives of C.H.H.A. in the play-downs by promptly cutting the deficit to one goal early in the first period on a sparkling goal by Bergeon on a solo effort. This boy, moved back to a defence position from centre was one of the stars of the game. His defensive play teamed up with Don Porritt, who is ready to advance to senior company, made the path to Wagar in Tweed goal a difficult one.

The second period was well advanced before Puffer, Norwood defence star, was able to break into the scoring column. With his experience on Norwood Intermediates where he is one of the mainstays of the team, Puffer eluded his check and scored twice to give his mates a three-goal margin on the round. Even this did not dampen the fighting spirit of Tweed boys who fought back hard and Courneyea knotted the count for the game in the third period for the last goal. Luffman, Tweed right winger, was painfully hurt in the middle of the last period and was forced to retire. His injury affected the play of his teammates who were unable to put any snap into their play for the balance of the game.

Norwood: Bonguard, Puffer, Gardiner, Johnson, Buck, Green, Nelson, Cole, Morris, Lemon, Lubo, Fife.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of the late Albert Gibson wish to acknowledge with heartfelt appreciation, the kind and thoughtful expressions of sympathy of friends and neighbors during their recent bereavement, also for the many beautiful floral tributes. f26-1t

AT THE McCARTHY

"SUED FOR LIBEL"

With an excellent cast including Kent Taylor, Linda Hayes, Lillian Bond, Morgan Conway and Thurston Hall, one of the most exciting mystery comedy productions to reach the screen is the feature presentation, "Sued For Libel" playing at the McCarthy Theatre. In addition the program includes the "Fox Movietone News" of the latest important world-wide events also an all-star comedy "Sales Slip" and an all technicolor amusing Walt Disney cartoon.

During the engagement of this program at the McCarthy Theatre, fifteen percent of the entire box office receipts will be donated to the Belleville Branch of the Army and Navy Veterans Association as a contribution by Mr. J. C. McCarthy, owner of the McCarthy Theatre, towards the Veterans War Service Fund. Your attendance will be appreciated and will in no small way help Belleville's returned soldiers reach their quota in the drive which is taking place throughout Canada during this week.

AT THE BELLE

"20,000 Men a Year!"

Today America's eyes are on them—as the college youth of the nation, thousands strong, take to the sky! Eager for action, ready for danger, the students of today are the airmen of tomorrow, and their thrilling story is told, through the eyes of the women who love them and the men who give them wings, in the Cosmopolitan production for 20th Century-Fox next at the Belle theatre.

"The Honeymoon's Over"

Meet the happy newlyweds who found love in an office but lost it when they moved in that little rose-covered cottage and were swamped by the high cost of "Society" living! They're Stuart Erwin and Marjorie Weaver typical American couple of "The Honeymoon's Over" 20th Century-Fox comedy which is anounced as the accompanying feature.

It's a sure-fire, down-to-earth comedy that's crammed full of incidents, experiences and adventures that might happen to anyone or his neighbor in Belleville in a fast-paced, modern manner, this true-to-life tale presents the Todds as a mismatched young couple who live beyond their means and provides more hilarious fun than many a comedy seen here in many weeks.

The popular Belle news of the hour will be exhibited on the same program.

"Brother Rat and a Baby"

The popular Belle newsreel, a funny comedy cartoon, "Screwball Football" and a novel and entertaining film technicolor "American Saddle Horses" complete the program.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Assassin of Youth"

Vividly portraying the evils of the marihuana weed—considerable of which, according to authorities, is growing throughout the country—the motion picture "The Assassin of Youth" now showing at the Capitol theatre forcibly brings to mind the importance of co-operation in the nation-wide drive now under way to exterminate the nefarious practices that have developed from the illegal and health-destructive uses of this obnoxious plant.

Recently Dr. John J. Shaw, Pennsylvania Secretary of Health, after reviewing this picture declared: "To my way of thinking this picture will go a long way toward eradicating the use of the habit forming drug, marihuana. It is a picture like this that can bring home the true story to parents and to youth, so that they will know at first glance the horrors that follow in the wake of becoming an addict to marihuana.

"Motion pictures with stories like "The Assassin of Youth" and the drive that the Department of Health is making in this State with the full co-operation of Federal narcotic authorities, who are also doing heroic work, will go far towards ending forever the growing and using of marihuana within the borders of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

On the same program the added attraction an hilarious comedy is shown "Rich Man Poor Girl," starring Robert Young, Ruth Hussey, Lew Ayres and Guy Kibbee.

BOMBERS SCORE WIN OVER BATA

Stirling Squad Has Remote Chance to Make Playoffs in Trent Valley

Stirling, Feb. 26 — (Special)—Dropping the majority of their early starts by close scores, Stirling "Bombers" still with a chance of making a play-off position in the Trent Valley Loop have taken their last two games and are moving upward. Saturday night at the Stirling Arena the locals trounced the Bata contingent to the tune of 5-3 showing about that much superiority in the play. Friday Fraser was the star of the performance, rapping in two counters for the locals and outskating the speedy Frankford squad all evening. With Armstrong as pivot man the line of Barnard, Fraser and the defence of Bolti and Ingram were too good for the visitors. Fraser clicked for the first counter after ten minutes, taking a pass from Armstrong, who also scored seven minutes later from Ingram. In the second period Reid scored the only counter with only two minutes left "Vince" Guay tied it up early in the third. Stirling came back strong with Fraser scoring again and Richardson and Ingram getting one each. Pollard got the visitors' third tally to end the game 5-3 for Stirling. Reid and Pollard and Guay worked well for the losers. For Stirling Friday Fraser starred, playing the best game of the year. Fox played his usual fine game in goal.

Stirling have a rather remote chance plus a real determination to get in the play-off and playing as they did last night they will give some of the top-notchers plenty of worry before the season ends.

Red Goupille

Considerable criticism has been levelled at Montreal's National League team this season for lethargic play on the part of some of the players and lack of foresight on the part of the management for not getting into the swing of the "youth movement" that is currently the N.H.L. vogue. Involved in neither of these has been Clifford (Red) Goupille, large sized defenceman, who celebrated his 24th birthday last September and is rated one of the up-and-coming blue line players of the circuit. Born at Three Rivers, Quebec, a French-Canadian, he's a "natural" for the team he's playing with. It's his third season with the team, his first complete one, the last two having been spent shuffling between the National League and the Int.-Am. New Haven team. His crude way of going about his duties, with many resulting errors, naturally held him back, but good work has overcome most of his faults. As can be seen from his monicker he has red hair—and it's the brilliant kind. Six feet tall and broad-shouldered he hands out a hefty body-check and who knows but that he may be the Red Horner or Bucko McDonald of the league in a few seasons? Statistical totals until the beginning of the present season four goals, seven assists, 68 minutes in penalties.

Juvenile Hockey Loop Furnishes Quota of Thrills

Tweed, February 26—(Special) — The race in the Juvenile Hockey League is furnishing its quota of thrills for the followers of the sport and fair crowds are turning out to witness the efforts of the budding App's, Drillon's, and other stars of the hockey lanes. From the improvement shown by these youngsters, Tweed should have little difficulty in succeeding years in recruiting emplacements for the Trent Valley League squad.

Saturday night's double bill produced several changes in the standing. The Red Wings with one tie in five starts were plunged deeper into the cellar berth. The Baldwin-led aggregation gave the leading Rangers a bad scare and lost by the narrowest of margins 3 to 2. Meraw and Donohue scored for the winners, the latter netting the puck twice. Baldwin and Gehan scored for the losers. The win for the Rangers broke their first-place tie with the Bruins, who had been pressing them closely.

In the second tussle, the Leafs overwhelmed the Bruins by a one-sided score of 13 to 4, to bring them within one point of a second-place tie. Sills, Leveck and Prout each scored four goals for the Leafs, with Price notching the other goal. Baker scored 3 goals for the losers and C. Rivers one.

Ki-Y League

Playing a Ki-Y Midget series hockey game at the Hume Arena Saturday afternoon, the Polecats and the Junior Y's Men battled to a one-all tie. The Junior Y's Men took an early first period lead on a goal from Haggerty's stick but the Polecats evened matters in the final canto as Weymark batted the puck past De Rushie in the Y's Men's nets. The teams: Polecats—Goal, Rossett; defence, Reeves and Day; centre, Weymark; wings, D. Rossett and York; subs, D. Weymark, Burns and Smith. Junior Y's Men—Goal, De Rushie; defence, Stevenson and Haggerty; centre, Cross; wings, Flindall and Arnott; subs, Burshaw and Lovering, Referee—Carson.

GARDEN BEAUTY is the keynote of some of the new prints. Gray silk crepe makes a pretty day-time frock, printed with a flower cluster design in lilac, mauve and violet, the dark green stems tied with light green bow-knots. Skirt is pleated, bodice is criss-cross with soft pleats.

HE HEADS SWEDISH NAVY

Admiral Gosta Ehrensward, chief of the Swedish royal navy, is pictured aboard the Swedish flagship. Sweden is bolstering her military might, just to make sure she will not be caught napping, as Russia battles her neighbor, Finland. Swedish military authorities have already issued instructions to all anti-aircraft units in the country to fire upon any military planes seen flying over Swedish territory. The orders followed the bombing of the town of Pajala by Russian planes and brought indignant demands in the Swedish press that a protest to Moscow be followed by insistence on compensation and assurances against similar repetition.

JUNGLE TOM-TOM, DRUM AND GONG USED WITH 'PROBLEM CHILDREN'

Boston, Feb. 24—(AP) — Jungle music is being used in a New York psychiatric ward to aid scientists in solving the difficulties of "problem children," two investigators said today.

Dr. Lauretta Bender and Miss Franziska Boss, an exponent of the modern dance, declared the use of tom-tom, drum and gong, and other primitive musical instruments, in Bellevue Psychiatric Hospital, had successfully stimulated children into spontaneous dances during which many of their inner problems were revealed.

They told the American Orthopsychiatric Association, In., at the close of its 17th annual meeting that vibrations of percussion instruments provide a stimulus for overcoming inhibitions in the children and are "a decided help in provoking reactions and re-inforcing them when they start to appear."

HEAVY SNOWFALL IN S. ONTARIO

Driving Conditions in the Niagara Peninsula Worst in Many Days

(By the Canadian Press)

Heaviest fall of the year in some districts, a snow storm struck southern Ontario Saturday blocking anew many roads with a fresh covering of from two to five inches. The general forecast was for colder weather Sunday with scattered snowflurries.

Main highways and roads were kept open by huge motor-driven ploughs but in the rural districts the fresh snow again gave call to the horse and cutter as the most popular means of transportation.

With the weather generally mild, Western Ontario reported a snowfall of from three to five inches. The forecast called for sleet or rain before the thermometers take a downward course.

Driving Conditions Bad.

Driving conditions in the Niagara peninsula were the worst in many days. The blizzard struck while the remnants of a storm earlier this week were not yet removed from streets and highways. The three-inch snowfall covered icy ruts on roads and traffic was slowed down considerably.

Little Benny's Note Book

Sunday afternoon pop and I were alone on account of ma being out, and pop was looking at different parts of the Sunday paper and putting other parts on the floor alongside of his private chair, and I said, G, pop, you're putting the paper down just as neet as if ma was home.

Meaning instead of dropping it every wich way, and pop said, By gollies, that's right, it's just another proof of the enslaving effect of habit. Here I could be releasing the inhibitions of years by shying this paper all over the floor with baccanalian abandon, and what's more it would proberly be good for my sole, or at least my caracter. It would proberly make me a better man, slower to judge and quicker to forgive and more tolerant of the frailties of others, he said, and I said, Well G pop, do you think you'll do it?

I'm strongly tempted, it's not too late, pop said. I could still pick up this orderly pile and with a few fancy flips of the wrist send the real estate over my head and the sports in the far corner and the sissiety and fashions straight for all I care, he said, and I said, Only G, pop, maybe you better not, I mean when ma came home you'd only have to pick them all up again to show your good intentions.

Not at all, I could make you pick them up, that's one of the compensations of having childern, pop said.

Being what I was really starting to worry about, and I said, Well anyways, pop, it's such a swell day why dont we go out and take a walk instead?

Wich we did, pop claiming it would be a more unselfish thing to do on account of making work for the shoemaker.

Butter Prices A Little Firmer

Toronto, Feb. 26—Butter closed the week on a firmer note at Toronto Saturday after having shown a dull, sagging market during the previous few days. Little change occurred in eggs.

Eggs experienced a quiet day as most of the buying occurred earlier in the week. Prices closed steady, however, with no supplies overhanging the market.

RUDDER BROKEN, BRITISH PLANE

revealed, he was said to have been included in the last list of officers awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross.

The British plane was on reconnaissance patrol near the coast of Norway when it sighted and attacked a German Dornier flying boat cruising low above the ocean. The Dornier's bullets broke a hinge on one of the British plane's two rudders, throwing the plane out of control. The pilot was barely able to straighten it out a few feet above the water.

The British pilot headed for home, but was unable to make the plane fly straight. It vibrated violently from end to end and developed a corkscrew motion through the air.

Return to East Coast Base

The whole crew sat with parachutes and life-jackets adjusted, ready to bail out if the plane started a "death" dive.

After two hours of blind flying, the radio operator managed to establish a contact with his base and asked for the plane's position. When this was received, the men learned they were over the Irish Sea. They had overshot blacked-out Northern England without seeing it.

Given bearing, they found their way back to their east coast base, where anxious comrades were waiting with ambulance and fire-fighting equipment.

The plane appeared in the flare-lit sky with its tail gyrating wildly and slid down sidewise to a grab-like landing. Once on the ground, however, it straightened out and rolled to an easy stop.

Mechanics inspecting the plane afterwards found the tail end of the fuselage cracked two thirds of the way across and almost ready to fall apart.

LOOKING FORWARD TO FIRST FLIGHT

Right Kind of Reply

The quiet assurance of the commanding officer, Squadron-Leader W. D. Van Vliet—"What is expected of us we know we can do"—made an excellent impression in London air circles where it was described as the "right kind of reply to the loud Nazi boastings."

The press saw the arrival of the Canadian airmen as an appropriate comment on Adolf Hitler's speech. The Evening Star said: "If force is Hitler's argument he must be answered by it. If he cannot understand the great forces in the world that are making for peace, perhaps he will pay some attention to the fact that Canadian airmen are now arriving in this country to face with us whatever the future holds."

Greeted by Air Ministry

At the port of debarkation yesterday the Canadians were greeted by Captain Harold Balfour, Under-Secretary for Air, on behalf of Sir Kingsley Wood, Secretary of State for Air, and by the Earl of Derby.

Captain Balfour said the landing of the Canadians must have made the day "an unpleasant one for Herr Hitler and his gang." Lord Derby commented: "I cannot wish you a happy time, but I would wish you as happy a time as you can get. I would wish the Hoche something I know he will get, and that is a hell of a time."

The voyage across the Atlantic was rough half the way, but otherwise was eventful.

Squadron Hailed by Press

The Daily Telegraph in an editorial hailed the squadron as "inheritors and torchbearers" of the high tradition of Canadian air prowess established in the first Great War.

The Telegraph was the only London morning paper to refer to the arrival editorially, but other papers gave the Canadian airmen much space in their news columns.

An Eastern Canadian port, Feb. 26—(CP)—Making history by their departure, the 110th Army Co-operation Squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force left this port some hours after arrival from their training base amid the chill winds that formed the tail end of a February gale.

Spirits were high as the young airmen—their average age is 24 years—marched aboard the ship that took them safely across the Atlantic to the United Kingdom where their arrival was announced yesterday.

They no sooner found a piano aboard their ship than the squadron song, "We've got a lovely war to win," rang through the boat.

Two Days in Port

The 110th waited almost two days in port amid the usual secrecy surrounding such departures, before the order to leave came through. Then, with chill winds whipping through the rigging the big ship pulled out from the dock.

Two destroyers moved out through the anti-submarine net which guards the harbor. The troopship moved along some distance astern, followed by two more destroyers and the grey bulk of a warship of the Royal Navy.

The 400 odd airmen who comprised the squadron—first unit the Dominion has contributed to the Empire air fighting services — boarded their ship two hours after their train pulled into a dimly-lighted waterfront shed from Ottawa, where the men trained.

No Cards Permitted To Be Mailed

To prevent news of the movement from leaking out prematurely, airmen were prohibited from mailing postcards while aboard the troop train.

None among the crowds awaiting the arrival of a regular train at a nearby station knew the train carrying the airmen had been shunted from the station yards to a waterfront siding.

The men stepped from the train to a partially blacked-out platform. Officers had to use flashlights to read their roll-sheets as they called the squadron roll.

Farewell Inspection

Before boarding the ship the squadron was inspected by Air Commodore L. S. Breadner, who bade them an official goodbye on behalf of the Chief of the Air Staff, Air Vice-Marshal Croil. He reminded them that the badges they wore marked them as Canadians and members of the R.C.A.F.

"All of us will be following your record with interest and pride," he told them. Then, accompanied by officers of the Eastern Air Command, he passed along the lines of grey-blue uniforms, stopping now and then to exchange a word with the men.

Except for the dimmed waterfront lights and the absence of crowds, the embarkation was like that of peacetime passengers. Each airman received a ticket assigning him to his quarters as he passed before an official at the gang plank.

For the journey across the sea Squadron Leader Wilbur Van Vliet of Winnipeg, Officer Commanding the unit, arranged to hold exercises and instructional periods in the lounge of the ship.

On their departure Air Marshal Croil, waved good-bye from a huge bomber which flew in sight of the ship as it moved out into the stream.

Ashes Borne by Special Train

Canada's farewell to the man who had earned the respect and affection of its citizens were all the more moving because of its simplicity. At Montreal the urn was placed on board a special car. With the ashes travelled Lieut.-Commander Edson Sherwood, ADC; Hon. J. L. Ilsley; Dr. E. H. Coleman, Under-Secretary of State; Premier Angus L. Macdonald of Nova Scotia who had come from Halifax to Ottawa for funeral; and Rear-Admiral P. W. Nelles of the Royal Canadian Navy.

At the seaport, the funeral train drew up beside a rough plank walk over which have marched countless thousands of Canadian soldiers on their way to the wars. So carefully guarded had been the secret of the train's arrival, that only a score of persons walked behind the bier from the railway coach to the ship's gangway. But that company was typical of the plain simple democracy which had marked Lord Tweedsmuir's life in Canada. Although the number of mourners was small, it included representative of the Government, officers in full uniform, and the oil-stained engine crew of the train that had brought one who had often travelled throughout the broad lands of the Dominion on this his last pilgrimage.

Stern necessity prevented an elaborate ceremony. But the sincerity and simplicity of war-time made the tribute of farewell even more moving than the grandeur and pageantry of peace.

Wartime Surroundings

Turrets, guns, planes, and rough piles of overseas cargo formed the setting for this last act of drama in the Canadian history of this man —John Buchan. In the near foreground, the flags of ten great nations passed as if in review. Farther back, in constantly changing panorama, moved cruisers, destroyers, mine-sweepers and patrol boats, while looming behind and over all, rose the massive guns and fighting top of a huge battleship—symbol of an Empire's might.

The funeral urn was lifted from the railway car and placed upon a simple coffin draped with the Union Jack. Four able seamen of the Royal Canadian Navy, in ordinary sea rig and blue coats, bore the stretcher slowly forward towards the ship. A solitary member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police walked ahead. Two by two, followed representatives to the Government and the Military, Naval and Air Force Services. Among them were those who had accompanied the ashes from Montreal; the Administrator of the government of the Province with his Aide; the Mayor of the Port; an Admiral of the British Navy; the representative of the District Officer Commanding the Military District; the Air Officer Commanding the Eastern Command; an Assistant Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. and the Deputy Provincial Secretary.

As the funeral procession reached the side of the cruiser, a bugle sounded the salute. A Royal Marine Guard of Honour, drawn up on the quarterdeck, presented arms. The ship's chaplain, in his robes, led the sailors who carried the bier across the deck. He recited the funeral ritual as he went.

The guard reversed arms. They stood with bowed heads, leaning on the butts of their rifles. The ashes were placed upon a table in the centre of the quarterdeck. As the chaplain finished his service, four petty officers of the Royal Navy came forward and relieved the seamen of the Royal Canadian Navy of their sad but proud duty. They in turn carried the bier in slow procession to the captain's cabin where the ashes rested during their journey homeward across the sea.

Bugle Sounds.

A bugle sounds, and the guard files out.

Blue-jackets dress ship, and the Bo'sun pipes Admiral Nelles aboard with the honours due his rank. With him come the funeral party from the pier. The cruiser begins to bustle with brisk preparations for departure. The harbor comes suddenly to life. A Canadian destroyer flashes a signal to one inbound from the sea. A second destroyer turns in her own length, and follows the first—outward bound.

A great transport moves away from the pier. Slowly she passes the cruiser, her foredecks crowded with soldiers who stand to attention as their ship goes by. The transport moves into the stream and follows the destroyers towards the open sea.

The funeral party pay their last respects to the ashes of the governor general, take leave of the captain and return to shore.

John Buchan Has Gone Home.

There is a shouted order. The cruiser slips her ponderous moorings, backs away from the pier, straightens out, and steams in the wake of the transport. Above, the air is filled with planes moving out to sea. White foam boils from the stern of the cruiser, and soon she fades into the murk of the North Atlantic.

John Buchan has gone home.

Crying of Baby Saves Brampton Family From Suffocation

Brampton, Ont., Feb. 26 —(CP)—The crying of a two-year-old boy saved a family from being burned to death early today, according to his mother, Mrs. Kenneth McAllister. The fire did $3,000 damage in the Golding block here, destroying all the clothing, household effects, radio store stock and furnishings belonging to the McAllister family.

"It was the loud crying of George which roused us just in time," said Mrs. McAllister. "I was choked with smoke but roused my husband and we managed to get out."

ORDERS NEW TRIAL IN ACCIDENT CASE

Ottawa, Feb. 26 (CP).—The Supreme Court of Canada today ordered a new trial of the case of John McGillivray of Bowmanville, Ont., against C. H. McFadden, arising out of a motor accident.

McGillivray's car collided head-on with a car owned by McFadden and driven by a man named Larsen who was killed, when Larsen attempted to pass a truck near Bowmanville while driving from Detroit to New York.

At the trial, judgment for $6,530 was given in favor of McGilligray and a counterclaim by McFadden was dismissed. This was affirmed by the Ontario Court of Appeal and McFadden appealed to the Supreme Court.

TONY

— BY ELIZABETH VERNON —

CHAPTER IX

Alan woke suddenly, but that sound which had entered his dreams continued —a knocking on his door. Fire? He wondered for a moment as quickly he got out of bed and into his dressing gown. No, there were no warning shouts. Miss Antonia Querne? More than likely. His face, as he went to the door, was grim. He thought, "Well, this time—"

He opened the door. Yes, she was there, slight and frightened-seeming, as she had been before. "What are you doing here?" His voice was cold enough, and so he had meant it to be.

The answer tumbled from her lips. "I—I know you must think I'm mad, coming to you when we dislike each other so much. But [illegible] stared up into his face. It could, he knew, be giving her no encouragement. "Please will you come and see Jacky? She's so ill—I know she's very ill—"

"Where is Hyacinth?"

"I've been to her and to Mother. They say it's nothing. They won't come. Oh please come." For one moment she seized his sleeve as if in terror lest he should turn back into his room.

He looked down at her. "If this is a practical joke, Tony, you had better think twice."

She shook her head. "I know they —they've told you I tell lies." Her voice had changed. "But I'm not lying. I don't know what I'll do if you don't come." She glanced round with a kind of desperation. It was, he thought, as if she looked round for something which she might offer him. She found it. Her hands made a little movement. Her eyes met his. "I'll never be beastly to you again—ever," she said, "if you'll come."

He smiled a little. "I'll come. You needn't bribe me, Tony."

It seemed that she hardly heard those words. She had started off down the passage. He followed her In sight of a door that stood a little open, she stopped. The light fell full on her face, and he felt sudden shock. So much fear, anxiety—

"She's in such pain." Her voice trembled. "She's so brave—"

Before he could say anything she had turned and slipped into that room. He entered behind her. In the corner was a small bed. There was a shaded light beside it. A little, stifled sound came from the bed. Then he heard Tony's voice—so different now; quite calm.

"Is the pain better, darling?" she asked. Again for an instant he felt that old sensation—inexplicable —like self-reproach. "Hyacinth isn't coming. I've brought Mr. Fleming."

"Oh." said Jacky, and said no more. He could hear her quick breathing. She was huddled, motionless, under the clothes. Only her head moved ceaselessly, like that of a little dog in pain.

"Where does it hurt, Jacky?" he asked gently. He turned back the bedclothes.

Jacky stretched out 'her hand, feeling, before she answered, for Tony's hand. "Here," she replied.

Ah. That was what he had feared. He felt Tony's gaze on him, imploring—

"Don't touch me!" Jacky's fevered little paws held his hands away from her right side.

"Jacky, let me lift you, very gently. And Tony will make your pillows comfortable. You musn't lie twisted.'

"All right," Jacky relaxed with a sigh as Alan lifted her in his arms.

Alan returned from the long wrestle with the telephone. How sleepy the girl at the exchange had been, and how sleepy the midnight voice of the doctor's wife! The doctor was out on a serious case. And there was no other practitioner within distanct. If as Mr. Fleming seemed to think, the little girl was really dangerously ill, she could promise that he would be at Oaken by eight o'clock and with an ambulance in case of emergency.

Tony was awaiting Alan. Like a sentinel she stood in the door of Jacky's room. He paused. Should he wake Hyacinth? No. Poor darling —she had not, he knew, meant to be heartless. He could well understand the temptation to dismiss the news of Jacky's attack as a tummy-ache brought on by Christmas fare.

He beckoned Tony out into the passage. She came at once. He told her of the delay in getting the doctor. He did not tell her of his own fears. Looking down at her drawn face, he would have liked to comfort her, to take her hand. But he could see she would take no comfort from him—only the comfort of facts or of action.

"Ithink she will be all right, Tony," he said.

Very quietly, he walked over to the bed. Jacky slept. Her breath came more slowly now. She gave a little, puppy-like whimper. Then once more she lay at peace, and with a stronger hope he turned away. Might not the next crisis delay itself until the morning—until help could come?

Tony went over and put out the light by Jacky's bed. "We'll be quite all right now," she whispered.

He chose to misunderstand her. "I hope that we shall," he said.

"No. I mean Jack and I will be all right till the doctor comes. You needn't stay now."

"But I'm going to stay, Tony."

"I'd rather you didn't," she said.

He smiled, making no other reply. She gave him a quick look and then, as if she had learnt from that the uselessness of argument, she glanced away again. There was silence. Alan lay back in his chair, his hands linked behind his head. Suddenly, without looking up, Tony spoke with clumsy shyness.

"I didn't mean to be ungrateful," she said. "Thank you very much for coming when I asked you."

"I don't think you are ungrateful, Tony," he replied.

She turned to hm "What is the matter with Jacky?" she asked, as if he would be certain to know and as certain to tell her.

"I think she has appendicitis, Tony," he said.

"But that's dangerous." Her whisper was very low. "Isn't it?"

"It is, sometimes."

She was silent, but there was no calm in that silence. It was as if his words had forced her to gaze for one instant at the face of Despair. He leant forward quickly and took her hand in his.

"Tony, she is asleep now. Nothing could be a better sign than that. She may sleep till the doctor comes."

"Will he be able to do anything?"

"Yes."

"Because—you know—" she spoke slowly as if, he thought, she hardly realized that she was speaking aloud. "I can't go on without Jacky."

And listening to those halting words, Alan realized afterwards, the first tiny seed of doubt—doubt as to all that he had believed about Tony and her surroundings— was dropped into his heart. An instant later, he thought he had dismissed it.

"It will be all right, Tony."

There was silence. A half hour passed with halting step. Alan glanced at his watch. Four o'clock. For more than half the night Tony had watched—and in growing fear that had driven her at last to his door; the last place, he knew, to which she had wished to go. Now, hollow-eyed, her face blank with fatigue, she sat curled on the hearth rug, her back resting against a chair. Now with a little sigh she drooped sideways, her arm on the seat of the chair, her head on her arm.

Alan rose. He went over to the bed. By the light of the fire he saw how quietly Jacky lay. Her breath came evenly. The look of strain had left her face.

He turned and crossed the room, and stooping, lifted Tony in his arms.

Sunk deep in sleep, she did not wake. She lay, a dead weight in his arms. Very light she was, slim and small boned. He carried her from the room.

CHAPTER X

Alan was halfway down the passage with his burden when suddenly she leapt in his arms. Holding her, felt her heart race like that of some small, trapped animal. Her eyes, turned to his, were wide and blank.

"Jim—don't! I'll do anything! Don't hurt me!"

He had stopped in his stride, almost appalled by that hoarse, terrified voice and the wild fear in her face. An instant later her face had changed. She was awake now, he saw, and knew him.

"Oh!" She struggled a little in his arms.

Without speaking, he carried her the length of the pasage. If she had still slept, he would have laid her on her bed and covered her with the clothes. Now he set her down in the door of her room. Those desperate words, spoken in unconsciousness, still lingered in his ears. A suspicion rose in that part of his mind or heart into which had fallen the tiny seed of doubt. He disregarded it.

"You have had a dream," he said gently.

"Yes. A-a bad dream." She looked round her as if she were still confused. "I must go back to Jacky," she said.

"No. You took the first watch and it was far the longest. Now I shall take the second."

"But I must go."

"Tony," he smiled at her, "I am older than you, and wiser. I don't often give orders, but when I do I see to it that they are obeyed. And now you are to go to bed."

She only looked at him. There were tears in her eyes, and the sight of them touched him. He put his hand into her room and switched on the light. "Good night, Tony." He smiled.

"Good night. And—and thank you very much." She turned and vanished into her room.

The winter light, clear and grey, filled Tony's room. Presently, as if some thought had warned her, invading sleep, she stirred. She sat up, staring at the light beyond the wide windows and at the little watch on her wrist. It told her nine o'clock. In a second she was out of bed, struggling into her dressing gown, and in that second she had remembered everything. A moment later, she was running down the passage outside her room.

The door of Jacky's room was closed. There was no sound from within. Gently, Tony turned the handle. Very quietly she entered. There was no one in the room. Jacky's bed was empty. Tony leant back against the wall. Her heart had given one sickening jolt. Unconsciously, she held her hand there.

"Jacky—" she heard her own whisper. It brought her to herself. As slowly as if the load of fear in her heart were weighing her down, she turned and went back to her room.

It did not strike her as unlikely that, if her little sister had died, she would be left to learn that news from the first servant whom she might meet. Indeed, she knew that that was likely enough.

Potter was in the dining room, lingering over the breakfast table. He looked round as Tony entered. At sight of her face, he was moved from his professional calm. "Why, Miss—!"

Tony shook her head a little because the words would not come. "Miss Jacky--?" she said at last.

"Oh, didn't you know, Miss Tony? Miss Jacky was taken away in an ambulance this morning at seven. The doctor came. They're going to operate, so I heard; and in a hurry too, I understand."

Tony sat down very suddenly on the nearest chair.

"I'll pour you out a cup of coffee, Miss." Potter's concerned voice came to her ears. "You look as if you need something."

Tony raised her glance to the butler as if he were her one friend. "Was Miss Jacky in pain?"

"I wouldn't say she was too comfortable."

Tony saw a vision of Jacky carried away out of her reach. Jacky would look for her and not see her—

"The doctor was very kind." Potter said. "And Mr. Fleming—he carried her down the stairs himself. He wouldn't let the ambulance men have her."

Tony sat at her place at the breakfast table. She ate a little. The thoughts went round and round in her head. The battle in her heart between hope and fear exhausted her. She rose and went over to the window and knelt on the window seat, gazing out and seeing nothing.

There Hyacinth and Alan, returning from the hospital, found her. She did not turn round as they entered, but Alan looking at that solitary figure, understood the reason for that.

After a moment, she left the window. "Is it—is Jacky all right?" She addressed the words to Alan.

He smiled at her, reassuringly. "Quite all right."

"It has all gone off so well," Hyacinth said.

"And—can I go and see her this afternoon?"

Hyacinth took her place behind the great silver coffee urn. Slowly, she shook her head. "No, Tony dear. I'm afraid that would excite her."

Alan, helping himself to bacon and eggs from the sideboard, spared a glance at Tony. He saw how her face fell. Was Hyacinth right? It hadn't seemed to him that Tony excited Jacky. And then, after her loving care and fear of last night—

"Couldn't I be there—if I didn't speak—when she wakes?" There was a desperate effort at control in Tony's words.

Hyacinth looked up with a smile. She addressed both Alan and Tony. "I should be there myself. But Sister said it would be best if no one went."

"If you told me where she was, I could take Woodville to her. And he'd be there when she woke."

"And who is Woodville?" Alan asked.

"Her old teddy bear. But— oh, dear, I'm afraid that's no use either, Tony. Woodville is rather too germy and dirty; don't you think so, yourself?"

Alan, apparently immersed in his breakfast, saw the nervous movement of Tony's hands and knew that she was near to breaking down before him and Hyacinth. She would hate that. She was, he had seen, a proud little thing. Before he could obey an unexpected impulse to help her, she had spoken. Her low voice was fierce enough: "You wouldn't let me go to Jacky if she was dying!"

"Oh, Tony, don't be theatrical," Hyacinth said. "We know you're fond of Jacky. But why didn't you come to my room last night, instead of disturbing poor Alan?"

Tony rose so suddenly that her chair almost overturned. "What do you mean? I went to Mother's room. You know I did. And she said it was nothing. And- and I came to you. And you said—"

Hyacinth sighed. "Tony, must you begin this dreary lying again?"

For one instant Tony faced her sister. It seemed that she would reply. And then quite suddenly she had broken down in convulsive sobbing, turning away, leaning on the back of her chair.

"Tony, please go. I really can't bear one of your scenes now—on top of everything—"Alan heard how her voice broke. "I try to do what I can for you and Jacky. All I get is hostility."

"You hate us both."

"Please go."

"I won't—go—"

Alan came round the table. "Leave the room now, Tony."

She shook her head. Her face was streaked with tears, white—he took her by the shoulders. As he walked her towards the door he saw it all quite clearly. Of course Hyacinth had not refused last night to go to Jacky's room. Why had he listened to her lies? He wouldn't again.

But in spite of his knowledge of those lies there was something heartrending in her stifled sobs, as there had been something touching in her fear for her little sister. He opened the door.

She caught at her breath, striving for mastery over her sobs, glancing up at him.

"I wasn't lying—I don't lie—"

Gently, he put her out into the hall and closed that door behind her.

Why The Weather?

By Mayor A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Snow melting! Snow disappears through melting and evaporating. Clean snow melts very slowly because it reflects most of the sunshine. Warm rains and winds hasten both melting and evaporation. But a more effective agency to rapid melting is soot or dirt covering the surface. This is especially noticeable lately due to the practise of putting sand on slippery highways when the sun is out, the sanded snow or ice surface melts noticeably faster than the white clean surfaces found on the sidewalks and in the fields. The scattering of coal dust or like materials over snow surfaces has been done in some places to induce rapid and early melting.

Duke and Duchess Of Gloucester May Come to Ottawa

London, Feb. 27—(CP-Cable)—Tips on the next Governor-General of Canada have been frequent in the gossip columns of London newspapers in recent weeks, but few writers seem to realize that a decision on the appointment rests with Ottawa.

An exception is "A Londoner's Diary," in the Evening Standard today which said that according to usually well-informed sources a "movement is on foot to promote the appointment of Lord Chatfield," Minister for Coordination of Defence in the war cabinet.

"But only if Prime Minister Mackenzie King approves," the writer added, "will there be a vacant pew in the cabinet room at Downing street. The Canadian people would prefer to have the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester installed at Ottawa."

Skidding Car Breaks Electric Light Standard

Trenton, Feb. 27.—(Special) — Skidding on the slippery streets, a car owned by William H. Finkle, 252 Bridge Street, Belleville, struck an electric light standard on Dundas Street, Trenton, near the top of Gilmour's Hill, shortly after four o'clock this morning, breaking the standard and causing considerable damage to the vehicle. Mr. Finkle, who was driving at the time, escaped with a severe shaking up and some bruises. Trenton police investigated and decided there was no evidence of careless or reckless driving, the accident being entirely due to the slippery condition of the pavement at that point. Mr. Finkle was on his way to Toronto, when the accident happened.

Sudden Shift to Spring-Like Weather Believed Responsible for Surge of Aerial Activity

London, Feb. 27—(CP)— The war stirred with new spring restlessness today as the Royal Air Force made the longest reconnaissance flights of the war over Germany air raid alarms sounded in Paris, and large Nazi troop movements were reported along the Luxembourg frontier.

In announcing the fourth Royal Air Force flight over Germany within a week, an Air Ministry communique said, "our aircraft reconnoitred important seaports in Northern Germany and the Baltic."

The Baltic Sea—where runs the German iron ore lifeline from Sweden—is nearly 500 miles from the English coast.

British planes "operating over Central Germany penetrated as far as Berlin," the communique said. Flights also were reported over Western Germany and Heligoland.

Over Berlin Many Times

Last week, the Air Ministry announced leaflet dropping flights over Heligoland Bight and Northwest Germany.

The Air Ministry said last Thursday it "was not generally known," but British planes had flown over Berlin "more than once" since the start of the war.

Germany's aircraft also were active, and Parisians were routed out of bed early today by the first air raid alarm since last Nov. 23. No planes were seen by Parisians, although the alarm lasted 57 minutes.

Helsinki, Feb. 27 (AP).—The Finnish High Command today announced Russian attacks from the Arctic to the Gulf of Finland and acknowledged that Finnish forces had withdrawn to new defensive positions after an all-day Russian assault in the Arctic region of Petsamo.

In the north the Finns said they withdrew to new positions at Nautsi, on the Norwegian border 65 miles south of Petsamo.

In the south, the daily army communique reported, the Russians were driving across the Bay of Viipuri, attacking islands in the southwestern part of the bay, naval key to Viipuri, after having occupied the strategic fortifications on the islands of Koivisto.

Previously it had been decided that the trio, arrested last Saturday night, would not be asked to plead and would be remanded.

2 RAIDING PLANES BROUGHT DOWN OFF BR. COASTS

Both Were Heinkel Bombers and Were Shot Down by British Patrols

AFTERNOON RAIDS

London, Feb. 27—(CP)—The Air Ministry announced today that two raiding German planes had been shot down off Britain's coasts as the German air force apparently resumed its wide-spread coastal raiding.

One of the raiders, a Heinkel bomber, was downed by a patrol of the Royal Air Force fighter command off the mouth of the Firth of Forth shortly before 1 p.m. (7 a.m. EST).

That waterway, leading to the city of Edinburgh and the Rosyth naval base, has been a frequent target for German raids. The Air Ministry communique said: "Early this afternoon a fighter craft of the Royal Air Force shot down a second Heinkiel off the coast of Northumberland. Three members of the crew of the enemy aircraft were seen to take to a rubber boat."

An earlier communique announced the first Heinkel was shot down off the Firth of Forth.

The number of German raiders shot down off the coast of Britain since the war began is now 43. Nine others are believed to have failed to reach home.

Nazis Claim British Plane Shot Down

Berlin, Feb. 27 (AP)—The German news agency claimed tonight that a British reconnaissance plane had been shot down this afternoon in Heligoland Bight by German pursuit planes.

D. N. B. said the British craft was of the Bristol-Blenheim type.

(Britain announced that Royal Air Force reconnaissance planes flew over Berlin and other parts of Germany last night.)

D. N. B. said German warplanes had flown over Paris last night and reconnoitred Central France.

FREE FISHING

Albany, N.Y., Feb. 27 —(AP)— New York State Senate unanimously approved last night its own version of the old age grants—free fish for everyone over 70—if he can catch 'em.

The bill, sponsored by Republican Senator Earle Warmer, would permit persons at that age to fish without having to purchase a licence.

TRIO ARRESTED REMANDED WEEK

Case May be Heard as Indictable Offence When They Come to Trial

Ottawa, Feb. 27—(CP)— Charged under the Defence of Canada regulations, Arthur Roy Saunders and Harry and Louis Binder will not be asked to plead in magistrate's court today but will be remanded to March 8. It will be decided before then whether the case will be tried as an indictable offence or as a summary prosecution.

This decision was reached at a conference here last night between Crown Attorney Raoul Mercier of Carleton County and Walter Martin, representative of the Ontario Attorney General's Department shortly after the latter's arrival from Toronto with Inspector W. H. Lougheed of the Ontario Provincial Police.

Louis Binder, a private in the Royal Canadian Engineers, faces a charge of distributing literature forbidden by section 39A of the Defence Regulations. His brother Harry, former Parliamentary correspondent of the banned Toronto Daily Clarion, is charged with printing and distributing, and Saunders with printing or making it in his Ottawa apartment.

Mr. Mart'n expected to return to Toronto today for a conference with Attorney General Conant. "We are acting under Mr. Conant's instructions that any offenders under the Defence of Canada regulations are to be prosecuted most vigorously," he said.

SIX PARISIANS ARE WOUNDED

Anti-Aircraft Shell Fired at German Planes Near Environs of Paris Falls in Street

Paris, Feb. 27—(AP)—Six Parisians were wounded by an anti-aircraft shell that was fired last night at German planes scouting the environs of Paris for massed squadrons that flew over the capital area early today.

The air raid incident, most serious of its kind since three persons were wounded here Nov. 13, sent one of the victims, 39-year-old Leon Manach, to a hospital for amputation of his right leg.

The exploding shell, digging a hole two feet deep in the street, pelted surrounding buildings with fragments. It fell near the left bank's Censier-Daubenton subway stations. The persons wounded were in the Rue Mirbel, a Latin quarter thoroughfare.

All were taken to hospitals, but only Manach remained.

ALLIES MAY CHECK SHIPPING THROUGH VLADIVOSTOK

British Government Has Been Asked Whether Supplies From U. S. Were Being Re-exported to Nazis

NO SERIOUS LOOPHOLES

London, Feb. 27 (CP).—The British government assured the House of Commons today that there are no serious loopholes in the Allied blockade which permit shipment of United States and other neutral goods to Germany.

Ronald Cross, Minister of Economic Welfare, said in response to a question that no serious leakages through the United States, Russia, Norway, Italy, the Netherlands or Belgium were suspected.

A check is being considered, however, on shipping through Vladivostok, the Soviet Union's main Pacific port, he disclosed.

The government had been asked whether large tin shipments from the United States to Vladivostok during recent months were being re-exported to Germany since no such shipments were made before the war.

Mr. Cross said he was aware tin and rubber shipments from the United States to Russia had increased during the last few months but that oil shipments appeared to have fallen off. He declared there was no information whether part of these raw materials were being resold to Germany.

Mr. Cross told the House there was no possibility of copper from the British-owned Rio Tinto mines in Spain reaching Germany. Any such shipments, he said, would have to pass through the British contraband control.

The question of blockade leakage arose from an increase of 17,000,000 pounds ($75,650,000) in United States sales to 13 European countries, including Soviet Russia, in the last four months of 1939.

Mr. Cross said the exports had

Fox Terrier Saves Owner's Life Prevents Coal Being Thrown on Him

Guelph, Ont., Feb. 27.—(CP) —Bingo, a nine-year-old fox terrier, was acclaimed as a hero today. He mounted guard at the top of an open manhole yesterday while his elderly master lay unconscious on the floor nine feet below, and prevented workers from dumping a load of coal down the opening.

George D. Sleeman, 70, Guelph, owner of Bingo, said today he believed the dog's actions saved his life. Sleeman was walking with the dog when he fell through the coal chute in the store house of the Guelph waterworks' Bingo set up a continuous barking when a truck carrying four tons of coal backed up to the chute. Truckers attempted to chase him away but failed and investigation disclosed Sleeman on the floor directly beneath the coal hole. He suffered no serious injury.

By J. F. SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Feb. 27—(CP Cable) — Two of Britain's biggest battleships, the 35,000-ton Barham and the flagship Nelson, 33,950 tons, are under repair at naval yards after being damaged by enemy action, Winston Churchill disclosed in the House of Commons today.

Without disclosing when or where, the First Lord of the Admiralty said the Barham, which was completed in 1915, had been hit by a torpedo and that the 15-year-old Nelson struck by a magnetic mine.

Both ships were able to proceed to port under their own steam and soon will be commissioned again. He made no mention of casualties.

Mr. Churchill added that apart from the battleships Royal Oak and the aircraft carrier Courageous, which were lost early in the war, and the Nelson and Barham, "no other large ships have been damaged or sunk since the outbreak of war or during these very difficult winter months."

Mr. Churchill disclosed that the Royal Navy had not had to use Scapa Flow since the battleship Royal Oak was sunk there Oct. 13 with a loss of 810 lives.

Five New Battleships Soon Ready

He predicted intensification of the sea war and declared that the fleet soon would be reinforced by five modern battleships.

In connection with the Barham, it was recalled that on Dec. 29 it was disclosed that a battleship of the Queen Elizabeth class had been damaged by a torpedo and that three men had been killed. The Barham is of the Queen Elizabeth class.

The Nelson was able to make port under her own steam, Mr. Churchill said.

"This secret, of which many thousands of people were necessarily aware, was very well kept and has only just leaked out into Germany after it has ceased to have any importance," he added.

Largest Fleet in World

The First Lord said the five new battleships of the King George V class would give Britain 16 battleships—the largest battle fleet in the world—in addition to three battle cruisers.

These ships "are capable of standing up to the air bomb and are far better adapted to underwater explosions than anything we have today," he said.

"If we had not got at the present time unquestioned superiority in battleships, the German

Probably Show Simply a Reply to Recent British Flights Deep Into Germany

Paris, Feb. 27 —(AP)— Massed squadrons of German planes flew to the Paris region early today, dropped no bombs, but sent thousands of Parisians to shelters in the first air raid alarm of the year.

The alarm lasted from 4:31 a.m. (10:31 p.m., Monday, EST) to 5:28 a.m.

Only after "all clear" had been signalled was the size of the German force disclosed by observers. Hitherto, Germany's aerial incursions have been on a small scale with only a few of the reconnoitring planes reaching this far into France.

The coming of the massed squadrons was heralded last evening by two isolated planes. Anti-aircraft batteries splotched the sky with their fire, while searchlights roamed in search of the intruders.

Mrs. Ernest Kehler in Court as Boxer Husband is Charged With Murder

New York, Feb. 27 (AP). — The pretty wife of Ernest Kehler, 24, Winnipeg heavyweight boxer who fought under the name of Ernie Haas, came to his support today as a jury began to hear evidence in his first degree murder trial for the slaying of Dr. Walter Engleberg, 42, German Consulate Secretary.

"My place is at his side," insisted the wife, 25-year-old Mrs. Barbara Kehler, mother of their four-year-old son.

"I have all the confidence in the world he'll be acquitted. Any decent man would have done . . ."

She burst into tears at mention of Kehler's statement to police that he bludgeoned the Nazi agent to death last Dec. 6 when Dr. Engleberg made indecent advances to him.

At her side was the defendant's aging father, Henry Kehler, a Winnipeg harness maker, who said that despite his son's indifferent success in the prize ring here, he had "quite a reputation" in Canada "as a coming heavyweight".

A prolonged trial was indicated when the prosecution announced it

Dr. Manion Will Speak In the Auditorium Of Collegiate Institute

The Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion, Dominion Conservative leader, will speak here on Saturday evening in the auditorium of the Belleville Collegiate Institute instead of the City Hall Auditorium as formerly arranged, officials of the South Hastings Conservative Association announced today.

Dr. Manion, who will address the electorate of Hastings, Prince Edward and Northumberland counties, is expected to arrive late in the afternoon. The change to the Collegiate Auditorium was deemed necessary to accommodate the large crowd expected to gather to hear him speak, as the seating capacity of the City Hall auditorium is approximately four hundred while that of the Collegiate is more than double that number.

MANION CHARGES ENLISTMENT DISCOURAGED

Conservative Leader Speaks Eight Times in Home Riding of Fort William

AGAINST CONSCRIPTION

Fort William, Ont., Feb. 27 (CP)—Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion, National Conservative leader, will carry on his attack against government policies tomorrow night when he continues his election campaign tour at Sault Ste. Marie.

The Conservative leader lashed out on a new tack last night by denouncing the "impertinence" of the government in announcing its intention to introduce a scheme for unemployment insurance in the House of Commons. Prime Minister Mackenzie King has been making the same promise since 1919 without result, he declared.

Dr. Manion recalled that last year Mr. Mackenzie King refused to resort to Governor-General's warrants to provide one province with relief funds. Yet, he said, such methods would be necessary to finance relief until the new parliament can assemble, because of the Prime Minister's action in dissolving Parliament when he did.

The party leader spoke eight times in his home constituency, Fort William, where he will seek election at the general polling March 26. In the last Parliament he represented London, being returned in a by-election there after being named Conservative chieftain.

Would Beat Vote on Conscription Claim

The first duty of a public man in Canada is to keep this country together and conscription would split it down the middle, Dr. Manion said at Kakabeka Falls.

"It's no use trying to put in something that would break Canada into pieces, for we need a united Canada now more than ever," he told a supporter, who advocated conscription.

From his observations on an election tour of western Canada in the last two weeks he concluded, he said, that "conscription would be beaten on a vote in western Canada as in some other places."

Dr. Manion declared he was opposed to conscription also because it was both unnecessary and ineffective. In the first Great War Canada enlisted 600,000 men in the armed forces but only 10,000 were conscripted, he said, quoting Major-General A. G. L. McNaughton as an authority.

Dr. Manion quoted Quebec prewar speeches by Liberal cabinet Ministers in the last five years declaring opposition to Canadian participation in external wars, which pledges he said, had been forsaken.

He charged Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Justice Minister Lapointe with talking National unity while trying to stir up disunity between Quebec and the rest of Canada "for petty political purposes."

The conscription issue was raised again when the meeting was thrown open to questions and a war veteran "challenged" Dr. Manion or the Prime Minister to raise more than 200,000 soldiers without conscription. "I have a son and I won't let him go to war without conscription. We want fair play and equality," the veteran said.

Blamed on Mr. King

Dr. Manion firmly told the questioner he was making the speeches there, then explained the effect of conscription in the last war.

"He's a good Conservative. Lots of us feel the same way," said a woman in another part of the hall, complaining against the possibility of foreign-born taking the jobs as voluntary recruiting went on.

"We didn't have an anti-conscription league in the last war," added the veteran, holding up a circular letter bearing a Toronto address. "If the man who wrote this was here, I'd strangle him."

"You can blame that sort of thing on Mr King," Dr. Manion answered. "It's his government that has discouraged enlistment. In the last war, everybody was encouraging enlistment."

The treatment of men who were first accepted, after giving up their jobs, and then discharged for medical reasons, the handling of allowances, the lack of preparation, all helped discourage enlistment, Dr. Manion said.

If there were not enough men in the forces, it was not because men were not offering themselves but because they were being discouraged from enlisting, he added.

Circular Letter Read

The circular letter described the "no conscription league" as a means of providing "all those forces in Canada who are opposed to conscription an opportunity for co-ordinated expression of their viewpoint." It proposed to organize opinion supporting the attitude expressed "by all leading figures in the Dominion House of Commons who have announced that they do not intend nor do they see the need for, the introduction of the conscription method in Canada."

The organization's executive was described as "representative of the major youth organizations in this city, with the exception of the young communist league, as you will readily understand the necessity of avoiding any suspicion that the no conscription league is under the influence of any foreign power."

Steve Pearce, 42 Rosevale Avenue, Toronto, was mentioned as president of the organization.

Dr. Manion attacked the Montreal paper, Le Canada, from which he quoted parts of two speeches as "a vile organ down in Quebec which lies about me at every turn of the wheel."

He claimed Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe were playing in Quebec "cheap party politics as they have always played it," but they were not going to play it this time without being told about it.

SALVATION ARMY PREPARES FOR NEW CAMPAIGN

$3,500 Objective Set for Belleville and District — $1,000,000 to be Raised in Canada for War and Home Service

STARTS MARCH 11TH

In preparation of the War and Home Service Campaign which will be launched within the next three weeks by the Salvation Army, local officials of the well-known service body met at the Salvation Army Citadel on Pinnacle-street last night to organize for the Belleville and district campaign.

Major H. S. Alderman was in charge of the meeting while Mr. B. C. Sisler acted as chairman. "As a veteran of the Great War I shall always have a soft spot in my heart for the Salvation Army," stated Mr. Sisler as he assured those present of the wonderful work the Army had accomplished among the soldiers. "In fact anyone who was overseas in the last war has a great respect for the Salvation Army, and I only hope that it will be able to carry on in this war as it did in the last."

Major Alderman outlined the campaign as planned for this district, which includes Belleville, Foxboro, Corbyville, Shanonville and Point Anne, stating that the objective for Belleville and locality had been set at $3,500 while $1,000,000 was expected to be raised throughout the entire dominion for their immediate war and home service program.

A supper to be held March 6 when all team captains and members of teams will convene for the final instructions, will see the start of the local campaign, but actual collections will not be attempted until March 11, thus assuring that no interruption will be made with the Canadian Legion's campaign, now under way. All local advertising will be out before that time however and an intensive program of newspaper advertising will be released on or about March 4.

Officers in charge of the local campaign are: Major H. S. Alderman, officer in charge; Judge C. A. Cameron, honorary chairman; B. C. Sisler, chairman; P. C. McGuire, vice-chairman C. L. Jewell, treasurer; G. A. Morton, publicity.

CONSCRIPTION FAR FROM DEAD CAMPAIGN ISSUE

Both Major Parties Renounced Any Intention to Introduce Measure in Parliament

COL. RALSTON HEARD

Coldwell of C.C.F. Claims Guaranteed Initial Price of Wheat at 70 cents Too Low

(By the Canadian Press)

Both major political parties have renounced any intention to introduce conscription but it is far from a dead issue in the current election campaign. It keeps bobbing up as a persistent topic of political discussion.

Conservative leader Manion revived it again in a speech yesterday at Kababeka Falls, Ont., in which he warned that conscription would split the country down the middle. He said it is the duty of a public man to keep Canada together.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King has said that the government would not introduce conscription. Members of the cabinet participating in the campaign maintain that there is no thought of conscription. During the special session of parliament last September Mr. Mackenzie King said: "The present government believed that conscription of men for overseas service will not be necessary or an effective step. No such measure will be introduced by the present administration."

Eight Speeches Made

Making eight speeches at the lakehead, Dr. Manion spent the most active day of his campaign yesterday exploding a general broadside against the government. He charged the Liberals have no intention of introducing unemployment insurance and lashed out at the whole government war program.

Next year's minimum price for Canadian wheat will be 60 cents a bushel, basis No. 1 northern at Fort William, unless parliament makes a change, Mr. Coldwell said.

He condemned the present price for wheat as far too low. He maintained that the cost of production is considerably above the guaranteed initial price of 70 cents a bushel for No. 1 Northern at Fort William.

Minimum Price Too Low

Increased cost of machinery and other production costs made the 70-cent minimum too low.

Mr. Coldwell described Canada's war regulations as "un-British and un-Democratic" because they allowed the authorities to detain persons without trial. The government should make new provisions for the post-war periods, he said in discussing the effect of the war on Canadian economy.

Soldiers overseas with the Canadian Active Service Force should be given an agreement binding the Federal Government to provide adequately for their dependents should they be killed or for the men themselves until they are absorbed permanently into civil life following the conflict.

Claiming it was not the Ontario legislature's motion of censure but the 69 motions and resolutions that the Conservative opposition had filed that caused Prime Minister King to dissolve parliament, M. A. MacPherson, former attorney-general of Saskatchewan, opened a tour of Ontario at Galt.

He charged the Dominion Government had deliberately falsified the records by failing to print motions and resolutions filed by the opposition prior to the opening of parliament and issued a blank page instead. He criticized the King government's attitude in 1935 in rejecting a British government proposal for an Empire training scheme.

Policy of Drifting Claimed

Mr. MacPherson said the Prime Minister was trying to draw a red herring across the trail of domestic problems for the past five years during which he had pursued a policy of drifting, and was trying to make people forget promises of the past. He said war issues obscure all others at this time and that the people of Canada have but one common purpose, whether they are Liberal or Conservative, and that is to prosecute the war to a successful conclusion.

He charged that Canadians who are in uniform have entered the service despite the government, and not because of it.

Discussing the Commonwealth Air Training Plan, Mr. MacPherson compared Mr. King's attitude with his reception in 1935 of the proposed international St. Lawrence waterway plan and the proposed U.S. Alaska highway through British Columbia. "Mr. King does not hesitate about agreements with the United States," he said.

"Mr. King trusts the U.S. where he doesn't trust Britain," Mr. MacPherson added.

Claims War Costs Higher

Canada's present war costs are much higher than the first Great War because the 1914-18 effort was almost wholly manpower while this time it is men and machines, Finance Minister Ralston said at Ottawa in an election speech over the National network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Division this time costs probably twice as much at least as in the last war, he said. The estimates for Canada's militia services alone for the first year of this war are $197,000,000.

"At this stage of the last war our naval equipment and personnel was composed of two light cruisers and 1,500 men, and for the first full fiscal year of the last war the naval service spent less than $4,000,000.

"This time we have 6,000 officers and men in the navy. We have six destroyers and a flotilla leader with five naval minesweepers and 20 auxiliary craft, and the estimates for the first year are not $4,000,000 as in the last war, but about $40,000,000. There is, as a matter of fact, a building program on which orders have already been placed or tenders called for 90 additional vessels, totalling nearly $50,000,000.

No Air Force in Last War

"There was no such thing as a Canadian Air Force in the last war. This time the Royal Canadian Air Force comprises over 8,000 officers and men.

"But that does not take account of the air training scheme. The estimate for Canada's share up to September 1 was about $50,000,000 but the estimate for our share for the full fiscal year ending March 31, 1941, will be around $100,000,000."

Col. Ralston said it was his "very sincere opinion" that Conservative leader Manion has no justification for characterizing Canada's war effort as weak, inefficient or dragging.

All Candidates Tories is Claim

Revenue Minister Ilsley said at Yarmouth, N.S., that national unity would be "seriously endangered" if Dr. Manion's proposal to form a national government was carried out.

"When I see that all of Dr. Manion's candidates are Tories," Mr. Ilsley said, "I don't see how it would be possible for him to have the experienced and tried Liberals in his proposed government."

The minister said the fact was "Liberals have no confidence in his (Dr. Manion's) leadership and would refuse such offers. If Dr. Manion should go to the other parties and join with them, I think we would then have the worst possible type of government in Canada.

"Such a government, made up of a number of elements, would soon be full of dissension and conflicting views. Instead of unity such as exists in the Liberal government, there would be the worst dissension."

Boards set up by the Dominion government to handle Canada's war effort were constituted in most cases because of experience gained during the first Great War, Postmaster-General Power said at Vancouver.

Reviews Machinery Set Up

"It was quickly realized the moment war broke out that many things of importance would come up which could not be dealt with only by one man, or by one department, but that there must be consultation," Mr. Power said in a review of the machinery set up to handle war problems.

"It was understood also that a great many of these problems could not effectively be discussed by a whole cabinet of 16 members and so a cabinet war organization was set up, and certain agencies—some already in existence under statute and some specially created for war purposes—were tied into the activities of the cabinet war organization."

The first and most important committee, Mr. Power continued, was that called the War Committees. Its job was to consider questions of general policy, to co-ordinate all war activities, to consider reports from other committees, and to call before it for information any Canadian either in military or civil life.

Two Divisions Formed

Manpower requirements of organizations already created for Canada's war effort were the equivalent of "more than five army divisions," Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Minister of Pensions and National Health said in an address from Vancouver over the National network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The former Defense Minister, charging that "those who seek for political reasons to belittle Canada's war effort do not give you the whole picture," said that "in the last war we maintained four divisions in the field."

Canada already had two army divisions completely formed, one overseas and one in Canada, he said. In addition, there were half a division who have also gone overseas.

Naval and Air Force men already on active service in Canada were equal in numbers to a third army division, he said, and added:

"The maintenance personnel of the air training (The commonwealth air training scheme) will require the equivalent in numbers of two more divisions—making the manpower requirements of organizations already created the equivalent of more than five army divisions, not counting home defence forces and any further troops to be sent overseas."

The former Defence Minister termed "completely erroneous" statements that the Canadian government refused Great Britain permission to establish the air training scheme several years ago.

SUMNER WELLES HOLDS TALKS IN ROME TODAY

Results of Conference With Fascist Leaders Closely Guarded

VISIT TO HITLER

Rome, Feb. 7 (AP). — Sumner Welles, special envoy sent by President Roosevelt on a mission of inquiry in Europe, scheduled informal talks today with the Ambassadors of Germany, Great Britain and France is winding up his initial conversations in Italy.

Welles, United States Undersecretary of State, arranged to see Sir Percy Loraine and Andre Francois-Poncet, British and French Ambassadors to Rome, at luncheon at the home of William Phillips, United States Ambassador.

Later in the afternoon, his program called for a meeting at tea with Hans Georg Viktor von Mackensen, German Ambassador.

From these talks, he was expected further to round out first-hand information on what is going on in Europe before boarding a train for Berlin shortly after midnight. There he is expected to be received by Adolf Hitler and Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop.

May Stop In Berne.

The trip to Berlin will take Welles through Switzerland and it is thought he might stop briefly in Berne.

After visiting governmental leaders in Berlin, Paris and London, he is expected to return to Rome for further talks with Premier Mussolini and Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano.

Although Welles' aides emphasized his itinerary is not definite, he probably will go to Paris from Berlin.

Fascist newspapers, which at first had given scanty notice of Welles' mission here, carried front-page articles today of his "most cordial" conversations with Premier Mussolini and Count Ciano. They printed an Italian communique on the meeting with Mussolini without giving any inkling of the matters discussed, however.

Results Closely Guarded.

While Welles closely guarded the results, he was believed to have reviewed with the Italian leaders Europe's main political and economic problems and the possibilities of their settlement as the basis of a lasting peace.

Foreign observers expressed belief the talks must have gone beyond any simple "fact-finding" by Welles because of the speed with which Count Ciano arranged the session with Mussolini after his own hour-and-a-quarter session with Welles and Phillips.

Roosevelt's Message to Pope Pius

Vatican City, Feb. 27 —(AP)— Myron Taylor, special envoy from President Roosevelt, today handed Pope Pius a letter expressing the President's hope for "re-establishment of a more permanent peace on the foundations of freedom and assurance of the life and integrity of all nations under God."

The letter presented Mr. Taylor to the American President's "old and good friend," who as Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli visited him in the United States in 1936.

The President told the Pope he hoped "the common ideals of religion and humanity itself can have a united expression for the re-establishment of a more permanent peace."

The Vatican released the President's letter to the Pope together with one from Mr. Roosevelt to Mr. Taylor naming him his special ambassador to the Pope.

Task of Special Envoy

Both messages spoke of Mr. Taylor's task as to serve as "a channel of communication" between the President and the head of the Roman Catholic church.

The President told the Pope he was sending Mr. Taylor "in order that our parallel endeavors for peace and the alleviation of suffering might be assisted."

The letter spoke of Mr. Taylor's "humanitarian efforts in behalf of those whom political disruption has rendered homeless," referring to his work as chief of the intergovernmental committee for refugee relief.

Say Hitler May Demand Colonies

Berlin, Feb. 27 —(AP)—Informed German circles expressed the belief today that Adolf Hitler would tell Sumner Welles in no uncertain terms that the Reich demands hegemony on the European continent and return of her lost colonies.

From the insistence of inspired press articles that non-belligerents maintain complete neutrality rather than mere official neutrality, the opinion was advanced that Hitler would urge "more complete neutrality" by the United States.

GIRLS TOO SCANTILY DRESSED TO SUIT BOSTON CENSOR

Boston, Feb. 27 —(AP)— City censor John Spencer went backstage after the first act of "A Night at the Folies Bergere," which opened here last night, and ordered chorus girls and principals to put on more clothes.

Spencer left his opera house box seat after witnessing the opening scenes and warned Manager A. G. Munro that further violations in the second act would result in suspension or closing of the show. He said he deemed the costuming "particularly flagrant," and thus took the unusual step to order the changes personally and on the spot.

WOMEN PATIENTS ARE APPREHENDED

Three Escaped From Cobourg Mental Hospital but Are Captured Near Toronto

Cobourg, Ont., Feb. 27—(CP)— Three young women patients who escaped from Ontario Hospital here last night were apprehended in Toronto by Toronto police this morning, officials announced.

It is believed they hitch-hiked their way to Toronto. They are being held in Toronto pending arrival of local hospital authorities.

Police headquarters at Toronto said that shortly after the women were apprehended in the east end of the city, they were returned to the hospital. Further details were not available.

French Farm Workers Held to Soil For Spring Planting

Paris, Feb. 27 (AP)—The French government today ordered all the nation's farm workers requisitioned holding them to the soil under military control to assure the spring planting.

A notice issued by the ministries of agriculture and labor said that "agricultural production delayed by the severe winter must be intensified so that provisioning of the country will not be compromised."

The requisition decree forbade business and industries to hire workers away from the farms without special permission.

War industries employees already had been requisitioned, giving the government control over their work. The new measure, applying to a large proportion of this predominantly agricultural country was designed to meet a shortage of help arising from the general mobilization and the shift of men from country farms to city factories.

Lord of Admiralty 'Touches Wood' During Speech

London, Feb. 27 (CP Cable) — Winston Churchill made a concession to fear of the unknown when introducing the naval estimates in the House of Commons today.

He was saying that the Admiralty had lost only 63,000 tons of naval shipping, or about half of the losses of the first six months of the last war, when Miss Ellen Wilkinson, Labor, shouted across the floor "you'd better touch wood!"

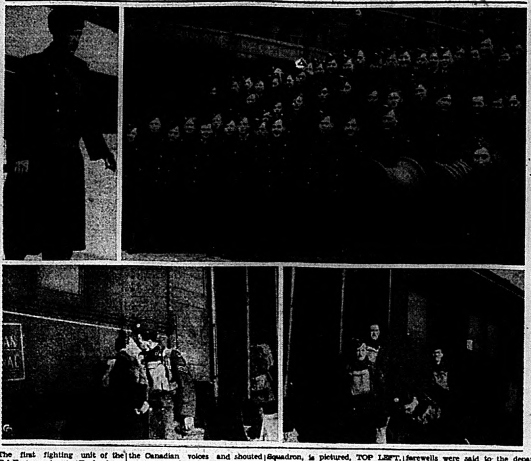
HOLLINGER MINER INJURED IN ROCK FALL

Timmins, Ont., Feb. 27—(CP)— Norman Hill, 25-year-old Hollinger miner, is in hospital with paralysis of both legs, probably due to a broken back, as a result of having been buried beneath 10 feet of rock on the 400-foot level of the mine last night.

Hill also is suffering from a fractured arm, bruises and shock. He was buried for more than six hours after he had been carried into a mill hole by huge rocks.

FIRST SQUADRON OF CANADA'S AIR ARMADA ARRIVES IN ENGLAND



The first fighting unit of the R.C.A.F. to arrive in England on active service, the 110th Army Co-operation Squadron, landed at an unnamed English port and entrained for a training base in the South of England. As the transport neared the dock, civilian onlookers heard the Canadian voices and shouted "It's more Canucks, God bless them." The 110th is pictured ABOVE, as they left an Atlantic seaport for their epic voyage to England. Squadron Leader W. B. Van Vliet of Winnipeg, O.C. of the Squadron, is pictured, TOP LEFT, as he supervised the entraining of his men for their trip to their sailing point. Drawn from all parts of the Dominion, members of the 110th are pictured, TOP RIGHT, aboard their transport ship. Final farewells were said to the departing squadron, LOWER LEFT, at Ottawa, where final training had been completed. Fur caps were replaced by field service caps, LOWER RIGHT, as the squadron entrained for active service overseas.

HASTENS TO WARN OTHERS, IS INJURED

Larder Lake, Ont., Feb. 27—(CP) —Little hope was held today for recovery of Cecil Kirkpak, stope leader of the Kerr-Addison mine at this Northern Ontario settlement, injured Saturday in a dynamite blast.

In the mine's first major accident since it opened more than a year ago, Kirkpak was injured after he loaded a blast. He hastened to warn other miners and received the full force of the charge.

INAUGURAL MEETING SET FOR TONIGHT

Young persons in the city who are interested in the Youth Movement being sponsored by the National Conservative party leaders will have an opportunity to attend the Conservative Club rooms this evening, when the inaugural meeting of the Belleville club will be held. The publicity committee of the National Young Conservatives of Belleville have been working faithfully since last week to advertise the coming meeting among the young people of the city and a real lively get-together is promised. Music is being provided for the occasion, with general business and election of officers being scheduled.

Nazi Youth Challenge To Civilization Says Halifax

Must be Resisted on Battleground — Young Germans Deprived of Elements of True Judgment— Foreign Secretary Observes Moral Retrogression of Europe

Oxford, England, Feb. 27—(CP) —Viscount Halifax, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Chancellor of Oxford University, today envisaged Nazi youth as carrying a "terrifying challenge" against civilization which can be restricted "only by force of the battleground."

Addressing the student body at Oxford, Lord Halifax declared the driving force behind the Nazi movement is German youth—"deliberately deprived of the elements of true judgment."

"Their point of view is in stark opposition to yours," the Foreign Secretary told the students. "They have their own ideals, which to our minds are distorted and deformed, but for which hundreds of thousands of them are prepared, without moments of hesitation, to sacrifice their lives.

Barrier Must Be Broken Down

"There is what seems an impenetrable barrier dividing you from them which somehow will have to be broken down if the youth of Europe is to avoid living always in this waste land and if the European temple of civilization is to deserve and win a rekindling of lamps."

Saying that youth may take the view that their elders have made havoc of the world, the Foreign Secretary said "No generation has the right to lay the cause of all its ills upon the shoulders of its predecessors" and the conflict today is "between youth and youth."

A Victorian visitor, he continued, "would be astounded no doubt by the material conveniences with which we have added to the ease of life, but he would be still more astounded by the moral retrogression of Europe and this devastating perversion of youth in Germany.

Active Force of Evil at Work

"I do not believe that civilization has yet foundered but I am certain that there is an active force of evil which, unless we fight it, will rapidly reduce our civilization to a desert of the soul.

"That evil force is at work in a period of human history in which change has been so sudden as to bring grave confusion of thought to give more favorable conditions for the Devil's work."

Perfection of Individual

Deploring the "inhuman conception of the so-called economic man" and the "tendency to explain all history and humanity in economic, instead of in human terms," he said that Christianity, "on the other hand, has rather made its end the perfection of the individual in the conviction that here, too, lay the secret of life for all society."

War, he said, "is a reflection on the turmoil and conflict in the minds of men. If, therefore we are to recapture the secret of order for international society—and here I speak for all countries—we must as individuals strive to erect or maintain standards that will bring true freedom through the way of discipline."

Resist Force and Build Peace

Lord Halifax said that as potential soldiers students had a right to ask "what are we to fight for?" Answering, he said, Britain's twin purpose is "to resist force" and "to build peace."

"The future of humanity must not be left in the hands of those who would imprison and enslave it," he declared.

London Circles Tell of Uneasiness in Berlin Over Welles' Visit

It is Said Under-Secretary May Ask Embarrassing Facts About Poles and Czechs and Proposals for Their Future

(By H. M. Peters, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Sumner Welles, United States Under-secretary of State, began his European fact-finding mission by handing Premier Mussolini a personal message from President Roosevelt. In turn he heard Il Duce's opinions on the fundamental differences that have brought the great western powers into war.

Obviously, behind the diplomatic reserve, Mr. Welles has been told to see if he can find any basis by which the president could make a new attempt to head off a major onslaught by the massed armies of either side.

The place his trip—to Rome, Berlin, Paris and London in that order—will take in war history is uncertain but from the Washington point of view in which journey was conceived, its urgency was given impetus by such reports as heavy massing of German troops near Luxembourg.

Germany May Be Uneasy

Germany is reported in London circles to be uneasy about the visit. For instance Welles is likely to want to hear what may be embarrassing facts about Poland and Czecho - Slovakia and Germany's intentions toward those unhappy countries.

In the light of Mr. Roosevelt's other message announced today— that delivered by Myron Taylor to Pope Pius—in which the president expressed concern over "assurance of the life and integrity of all nations under God," it is asked how he could possibly be indifferent to the future of the nations now temporarily in subjection.

What Will Berlin Say?

It is difficult to see what Berlin could tell Welles that would aid his cause. Hitler's defiant speech of last Saturday did not seem to indicate readiness in Mr. Chamberlain's words, "to show us conclusively that she (Germany) has abandoned that thesis that might is right."

Incidentally Mr. Chamberlain in his Saturday speech interjected a sentence that seemed to rule out an Allied peace with, for instance, Field Marshal Goering, should Hitler step aside.

"Under the present government of Germany there can be no security for the future," Mr. Chamberlain said, adding significantly: "The elements in Germany who are ready to cooperate in building the new Europe are ruthlessly proscribed."

Goering and his associates in the economic dictatorship of the Reich are by no means to be regarded as "ruthlessly proscribed."

Polish Government May See Welles

Paris today hinted that the Polish government in exile, established on French soil, will certainly expect to see Mr. Welles when his itinerary brings him to Paris. Authoritative revelations of brutality exercised by the German administration in Poland suggest that he will hear on that part of his trip of a side of warfare not always uncovered in the diplomatic conference-room.

British Press Opinion

London, Feb. 27 (CP) — The United States should not come into the war "by diplomatic interferences," the Daily Mirror said today, and should not "make things more difficult by impeding our blockade."

Commenting on the European "voyage of exploration" by Sumner Welles, United States Under-Secretary of State, the Mirror said:

"What we expect of America is not that she should come in, but that she should not make things more difficult by impeding our blockade, and that she should not come in by diplomatic interferences or half come in and half stay out."

The Daily Telegraph said Mr Welles "was undoubtedly able to obtain in Rome a searching and objective judgment of the policy of aggression on Poland from which Italy determined to stand aloof, of the pact with Russia which made the invasion possible, and of the hideous cruelties inflicted on the Poles."

Hitler Circles Between Two Opinions

"There is evidence that the higher circles of Hitlerism are now halting between two opinions about Mr. Welles visit, as on many other subjects. Anxiety not to offend the United States struggles with alarm that the visit must injure Germany show her in the wrong, and marshal American and world opinion against her."

The Daily Mail quoted Prime Minister Chamberlain's assertion that, when the war is over, the neutrals will have a say in rebuilding Europe. Mr. Welles, it said, undoubtedly took careful note of the Prime Minister's words.

Meaning of Statement

"What does this statement mean?" the Daily Mail queried. "Some neutrals today are practising one-sided neutrality. Will they be able to claim a place at the conference table?

"The neutral countries vastly outnumber the Allies. Will these nations be able to outvote the Allies on any vital point?

Kent Taylor featured with Linda Hayes in the mystery-comedy "Sued for Libel," now at the McCarthy Theatre.

Conductor Killed At Hamilton

Hamilton, Feb. 27—(CP)—Storm conditions were blamed today for the second railway fatality within eight days when A. N. Clavel, 46, Hamilton, conductor of a Toronto-Hamilton and Buffalo switch engine crew, slipped in the Forrest Avenue yards, fell under a moving train and was killed. A fine snow had caused slippery conditions.

The last car was said to have passed over his legs, death resulting as police were rushing him to the general hospital. Born at Montreal Clavel had resided here for 26 years. He is survived by his widow and four children. Dr. Leeming Carr, coroner, is investigating.

James G. Lord, 63, a Canadian National Railways car repairman, was killed Feb. 19 during the season's worst blizzard when he walked into the path of a backing switch engine.

WILLIAM TAYLOR GIVEN A YEAR

In Addition Driving Licence Ordered Suspended for Period of Two Years

Kingston, Ont., Feb. 27.—(CP)— William Taylor, charged with dangerous driving and convicted in Supreme Court last week, today was sentenced to one year in prison, by Mr. Justice F. D. Hogg. In addition his driving licence was ordered suspended for at least two years.

Taylor was driver of a car which figured in an accident last October on the LaSalle Causeway when four persons were killed. The Grand Jury brought in "No Bill" against him, and later the case was ordered re-opened and a second Grand Jury brought in a True Bill against him.

France to Supply Guns, Warplanes, Armaments To Rumania by Treaty

Bucharest, Feb. 27—(AP)— Three agreements whereby France would supply Rumania with large quantities of warplanes, machine guns and other armaments were reported today.

Signing of the contracts was reported unofficially as a Rumanian Finance Commission returned from Paris.

Great Britain, it also was reported, already has flown 60 Spitfire pursuit ships and Bristol Blenheim bombers to this country.

The French and British action was described as following upon receipt of assurances from Rumania that Germany would not be favored in exports of Rumanian oil.

This produced some uneasiness here as to Germany's future action toward Rumania, particularly in view of the expected arrival of a German economist this week to seek more oil.

Economic Contest May Develop

Meanwhile, Italian negotiators began conferences which observers believed might develop into a Balkan economic contest with Germany.

Launching of discussions with the Italian Trade Mission here caused widespread speculation in Foreign diplomatic quarters as to Italy's motives in seeking an increased share of Rumanian exports—at the moment when either Germany or the Allies have contracted for nearly everything.

Most informed circles held the belief that Italy was seeking to nudge out Germany and resell Rumanian goods in world markets for gold.

German quarters openly expressed anger at the French-Rumanian agreement, especially after the government's action yesterday in raising railway rates on exports, including oil, to Germany.

At the same time French and British quarters declared Rumania must remain "on her good behaviour" or there may be a repetition of their action of January when they stopped all raw material exports to this country because Rumania appeared to be favoring the Nazis.

POLICE ARREST 30 CROAT LEADERS

Charged With Plotting to Break Up Yugoslavia by Revolt

The men were accused specifically of inciting riots and planting bombs which exploded in many parts of the city.

They were identified by police as followers of Dr. Anton Pawelich, head of the Ustachi (Croat Secret extremist organization), blamed for the assassination of King Alexander at Marseille, in October, 1934.

Two of the arrested men were identified as Dr. Milan Budak and Dr. Stephen Buc, reported lieutenants of Pavelich, who is living in Italy.

The arrested men are opponents of the Croatian peasant party leader, Dr. Vladimir Machek. They have attacked Machek for working in agreement with the Serbs and have insisted Croatia must be completely independent.

Not Slavs Like Serbs

Buc has declared publicly the Croats are not Slavs like the Serbs but are of Gothic origin, and therefore should accept German National Socialism.

The bomb explosions occurred the evening of February 24 while the Italian minister Giuseppe Bottai was in Zagreb. The bombs were placed in public telephone booths. No one was injured.

Pavelich has been living in Italy since a French court convicted him of complicity in the assassination of King Alexander. He never was arrested, but was tried by proxy.

The king's assassination came shortly after he had disembarked from a liner on a goodwill journey to France. The killer fired a number of shots into the king's carriage. The French foreign minister, Louis Barthou, riding with the king, also was killed.

SPRING IN AIR AT ALDERSHOT

Canadians Will Organize All Forms of Sport Under February's Inspiration

(By Edwin Johnson, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Aldershot, Feb. 27—(CP-Cable) —Spring is in the air and with it the spirits of the Canadians have zoomed to the heights. Almost forgotten is the recent cold spell which brought in its wake a mild outbreak of colds and flu. Plumbing problems are at an end and in most barracks the men have been able to discard that extra blanket which winter made necessary. As the troops marched along the highways on routine exercise today they filled the air with cheerful songs which brought out the citizens in hamlets and villages.

Cries of Baseball

During the lunch interval the parade and recreation grounds throughout the Canadian training area echoed with the familiar cries of baseball as the boys enjoyed their first real workout chasing "flies" or playing catch.

Already teams have been lined up with challenges tossed from unit to unit. Plans are also afoot to organize divisional softball and soccer leagues. Spring in February is a new experience for most of these Canucks and they are making the most of it while it lasts.

Few of the men are aware of it, but they will receive a most welcome surprise before the day ends. Hundreds of bags of mail arrived from home this morning and for hours the divisional postal staff has been busy with the big job of unloading and sorting.

CHANGES UNIFORM

Provincial Constable J. Morgan, Belleville, changed uniforms Saturday when he became a lieutenant in the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment. Morgan received his call a few days ago, and was given release from the provincial police force.

WAR BRIEFS

Berlin, Feb. 27 (AP)—The German high command's communique today said:

"No special events."

Paris, Feb. 27 (AP)—The army high command's morning communique today said:

"A quiet night on the whole front."

Amsterdam Feb. 27 (AP) — Netherlands anti-aircraft batteries fired repeatedly last night at unidentified foreign planes which flew along Holland's coast over Amsterdam and the province of Utrecht, the government announced in a communique today.

London, Feb. 27 (C.P. Cable) — The first conscientious objector who refused to report for noncombatant duty has been arrested and is now awaiting a military escort. He presumably will be taken before a court martial.

Fenner Brockway, chairman of the Central Board of Conscientious Objectors, said Kenneth Makins, a Christadelphian of Redcar, Yorkshire, lost his appeal against noncombatant exemption before a local tribunal in December.

Shanghai, Feb. 27 (AP)—British troops patrolling Shanghai's "badlands" district arrested 14 Chinese gunmen and seized a quantity of arms and ammunition today, and then turned down protests by Japanese gendarmes.

The Japanese said the Chinese were followers of Wang Ching-Wei, slated to head the Japanese-controlled government in occupied portions of China, and that for this reason their arms should be turned over to the Japanese.

The British authorities refused and after a tense interval the Japanese withdrew.

Zurich, Switzerland, Feb. 27 (CP-Havas)—Death of Hermann Baranowski, 55, whose career as Nazi commander of the Sach-Senhausen concentration camp won him the name of "Bloody Hermann," was announced in the Voelkischer Beobachter, Nazi party organ copies of which reached here today.

London, Feb. 27 (CP)—The first E.N.S.A. (Entertainment National Service Association) theatrical company to entertain British troops and airmen with full-fledged plays will be sent to France this Saturday, it was announced today.

Two comedies will be presented during the eight-week tour.

London, Feb. 27 (CP)—The Admiralty today appointed the famed etcher and painter, Sir Muirhead Bone, as official Admiralty artist for the duration of the war.

Sir Muirhead, who was an official artist on the western front and with the fleet during the first Great War, has been accorded the rank of Major in the Royal Marines "because it was thought the uniform would suit him better than naval uniform."

Tokyo, Feb. 27 (AP)—An army communique today announced that six officers were killed in an airplane crash near Kyoto. They were Lieut.-General Hisao Hozoji, Major-General Misao Okada and four other members of the Kwangtung army (Japan's Manchoukuo garrison).

Bridgeport, Conn., Feb. 27 (AP)— Igor Sikorsky, noted airplane designer, disagrees with the opinion that the advent of spring will aid the Russian campaign in Finland, believing, rather, that "spring will be more of an asset than a liability to Finland."

"The (Finnish) terrain which is now very firm and the lakes which are solidly frozen will thaw out with the coming of spring making travel almost impossible," said Sikorsky, a native of Kiev, Russia, in a talk here last night.

He added that if the Finnish forces were augmented by 100,000 soldiers the "war would go on indefinitely."

THE LAST JOURNEY OF LORD TWEEDSMUIR

The ashes of Lord Tweedsmuir, Canada's late beloved Governor - General who died while in office, are now in England, where they will rest in the church at Elsfield, Oxfordshire ,until arrangements are made for their removal to his native Scotland, for interment. It was fitting that the passage of this great man who served Canada so well in the days of peace and who had played his noble part in the months since the war began should be to the accompaniment of that security in which he so devotedly believed, the security of the British navy. The urn containing the ashes was borne over the Atlantic on a British warship which was one of the guardians of a convoy of troops, and of food and other supplies for the Motherland. With him on that last journey across the sea were Canadian airmen guarded by the very ships as guarded his remains. Canadian soldiers could have asked no more than to be privileged to have this last honor of being in the convoy of the remains of the man who was loved by all Canadians. The modest viceroy had he been privileged to cross the sea in life at this time would have chosen no more apt passage to the land which saw his birth.

He now rests in the quiet of the sanctuary. Soon sleeping his last long sleep, he will be in repose in his beloved Scotland.

> "How sleep the brave who sink to rest
> By all their country's wishes blest!"

Canadians feel a deep sympathy for the Lady Tweedsmuir and her family whose associations with Canada have been so suddenly changed at a time when they might have expected a glorious homecoming with the head of their family at the close of his service as governor-general in the premier Dominion. Canada in the hour of her loss does not forget this family who have so enriched Canadian life and who will always have in the hearts of the people of this Dominion a place of deep affection. Because of what the late Lord Tweedsmuir was and because of his family they will not be forgotten.

R.C.A.F. UNIT WELCOMED TO OLD LAND

The first Canadian squadron wholly trained in Canada has arrived in Britain, the 110th Army Co-operation Squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

These Canadian airmen are the heralds of that great armada of the air for the Empire which is to come out of Canada where the Empire air training grounds are to be established.

These Canadians were given a rousing greeting to the Motherland. Canadian fliers have been serving in the Royal Air Force with distinction and have figured in the great flights over Heligoland Bight and naval and air bases of the Germans. Now the first wholly Canadian squadron has arrived, the aerial co-operation arm of the First Division of the C.A.S.F.

This welcome to Canadian troops shows how much the Canadians, as the Australians, New Zealanders and South Africans, are welcomed to the Homeland. They are the living proof of the vital principle of the Empire. Hitler talks of the Empire's decadence, but there is no decadence when men leave home and their places in the newer parts of the world to go to fight in the amphitheatre of war in Europe for the sake of that freedom which has brought Europe forward and has been responsible for the development of newer world nations in America, in South Africa and in the Pacific Ocean.

There is no greater evidence of vitality than that. As contrasted with this loyalty and patriotism is to be seen the Nazi revival of the deadly philosophy of the rule of might and violence. Once-German colonies are now strongly pro-British, because they have learned the fruits of liberty.

So this Canadian unit of the air is especially to be welcomed not only because it is a Dominion unit and because it is the sign of imperial unity but also because in Canada there is being established the Empire Air Training Project which will produce many thousands of airmen from all parts of the Empire. The air arm is the great co-operative arm today in such a war as this now being waged.

The arrival of the airmen from the land where this vast army of war fliers is to be trained is therefore a symbol of the steady flow of the airmen to man that Empire Armada of the Air which will be the greatest that has ever been seen upon the earth.

'CONFUCIUS SAY . . .'

If news despatches some of these days bring word of strange rumblings and earth disturbances in the vicinity of a tomb near the Chinese city of K'iu-fow, don't be surprised. It will be the "most sagely ancient Teacher; the all-informed all-accomplished .. King", "K'ung Fu-tze" or in Canadianese, Confucius, turning over in his illustrious grave.

And well the sage old philosopher might, for his 1940 counterparts are scalping his 551 B.C. style and turning it into a flippant conglomeration of wisecracks that has been and is taking the country by storm.

In every town, city, and hamlet there are to be found the adherents of the new school of "silosophy." From restaurant and roadside lunch places, the jook-boxes emit raucous apothegms that credit Confucius with everything from the sublime to the ridiculous, "Confucius say," goes one, "he who find cat who has eaten stocking, get sock-in-puss."

And if one listens closely he will hear such "brilliant" Confucianisms such as "Him who work in beauty-parlod become panhandler" or "Him who would grow moustache on instalment plan should start with little down."

But the one which has correctly sized the situation, is "Confucius' brother say, 'Confucius talk too much'".

However, the new fad of applying modern wisecracks in a Confucius setting is but a repetition of the Oriental fads that periodically take the Occident by more or less storm. First it was Mah Jong, and more recently "Chinese Checkers" which still has a stranglehold on lovers of indoor sports. But strange to say, neither of these has had the general effect on the public as a whole as has the Confucius game.

The old Chinese sage had none of the flippancies that the modern versions would have one believe. As one writer says "Confucius was a serious scholar, intensely humanitarian, who preached the Golden Rule 500 years before Christ. He disclaimed being original yet he founded a philosophy and a system of ethics."

Extraordinarily brilliant, he attracted some 3,000 disciples, many of whom seldom left his side. They absorbed every word he uttered on history, poetry, music, rites and ethics.

Contrary to what the young modern expects to hear, some of his sayings, which dealt with his favorite subject the "superior" man included:

> "What the superior man seeks is in himself; what the small man seeks is in others."
> "It is only the very wisest and the very stupidest that never change."
> "A poor man who does not flatter and a rich man who is not proud, are passable characters, but they are not equal to the poor who yet are cheerful and the rich who yet love the rule of propriety."

The prolific writings of his disciples reveal that Confucius was of average build, careful about his dress both day and night, scrupulous about his food and in wine allowed himself liberty but not license. His public bearing was punctilious to a degree and in private he permitted himself no undue freedom. He was gracious and kindly but never fully relaxed himself, even to his son.

So don't blame the kindly Chinese whose brilliancy and kindness of heart left a wonderful heritage of philosophy to a world which, goodness knows, needs it sorely, when you hear the village wit let loose with the latest Confucianism, 1940 vintage.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

Still Another Treatment For Acne —Pimples

When Drs. Banting and Best gave insulin to the world, which prevents death in diabetes, research physicians throughout the world began intensive work on the pancreatic and other ductless glands of the body. Thus insulin is now used to produce shock in dementia praecox, and other mental conditions with most brilliant results. Another use of insulin is the stimulation of the appetite in underweights and those poorly nourished.

Similarly when Drs. Minot and Murphy, Boston, were able to show that ordinary liver—calf's, cow's or pig's—would prevent death in pernicious anaemia, liver extracts were then injected in these cases with the same satisfactory results.

It would now appear that another use for liver extract has been discovered which may mean much to the appearance and thus the happiness of many girls and boys and young men and women.

Until recently, acne —pimples— was considered a distressing ailment which often came with puberty and must be endured for ten or fifteen years—the most important years in life from the appearance standpoint.

Some skin specialists were able to help many patients by prescribing a diet. Then Xray treatment was found effective. Later, the injection of pituitary extract has given splendid results, as has also the use of viosterol by mouth. Now comes liver extract.

Dr. W. Marshall, Appleton, Wisconsin, in the Journal of Investigative Dermatology (Skin Diseases), Baltimore, reports his use of boiled liver extract in the treatment of fourteen cases of acne in which he obtained satisfactory results. The injection of liver extract—6 drops—is given so that a sufficient amount of the specific (or needed) vitamin may be had. When injectable liver extract is boiled for thirty minutes its acne improving factor seems to increase. "When this boiled extract is given to patients already taking liver extract regularly, their improvement appears more rapid".

This means then that to our present knowledge of the beneficial effects of Xrays, injection of pituitary extract, and taking viosterol by mouth, is added the further knowledge that the use of liver extract boiled for thirty minutes and injected under the skin also cures many cases of acne.

BRITISH MEAN BUSINESS

With British warships on patrol in the Arctic, the fleet shows that it means serious business in checking violations of Norwegian neutrality by the Germans. Great Britain intends to waylay German vessels leaving Murmansk and slipping down through Norwegian waters to the Baltic Sea and Germany.

The flagrant violation of neutrality in the Altmark incident has determined the British to increase their operations in the Arctic. Top many German boats have been allowed to slip through the blockade by taking advantage of Norway's laxity.

This increasing of the blockade pressure will impress on Nazi minds that Britain is not fooling. The sooner the Germans realize that fact, the better.—Windsor Star.

Expects German Assault in Spring

The Marquis of Lothian, British Ambassador to United States, when speaking before the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, made extended reference to the trend of events which are most likely to unfold in Europe with the coming of Spring. From the verbatim report we quote:

So far the war has been indecisive, though occasionally an encounter like the sea battle off Montevideo suddenly reveals the grim intensity of the struggle which is going on day and night, week after week, month after month, on and below and above the sea.

In our view everything today points to Germany attempting early this spring to gain a decision against England and France by a terrific attack by land, air and sea in which she will use every weapon in her armory. The reason we think this is not only the news we get but because by her own tradition it is the right thing for her to do. The object of war is to reach a decision and Germany cannot afford to wait. Moreover from the point of view of the National Socialist party and the militarists who support it, not only is there a chance of rapid decision this summer, but if the decision went in their favour it would give them the supreme prize, world empire. That chance may never come again. Nazi Germany is in a better position to win it today than she was in the last war. Then she had to fight a war on two fronts. Today she can concentrate almost every force she has in the West. A month ago, despite the Russo-German Pact she cast a suspicious eye towards her rear. Today the resistance of the heroic Finns has shown up the weakness of the Russian army—and gives her more freedom of action in the West. Again, in the last war she had no effective long distance air power. Today she has the most tremendous air force in the world and is daily adding to it.

Even in the last war the German General Staff made three desperate bids for world power. The first was the thrust against France through Belgium in 1914. The second was in 1917. Ludendorff had been warned by Bethmann-Hollway and by the German Ambassador in Washington that introduce unlimited submarine warfare against all merchant vessels travelling to Great Britain and France would certainly bring in the United States against Germany. Ludendorff replied that he did not care, because if the submarine campaign was quickly successful, nothing that the United States could do would save England from defeat or Germany from taking her position. He very nearly succeeded. Not soon shall I forget the anxiety of the following months, when 800,000 tons of shipping were being sunk a month. If Germany had been able to continue sinkings at this rate for a year the Allies would have lost the war. As it was, the submarine was mastered by the autumn of 1917 by the convoy system, by the depth charge and by the destroyer patrols, in which your young sailors under Admiral Sims played so notable and effective a part. So far in this war Great Britain has only lost an average of slightly more than 102,000 tons per month, and neutrals have lost an average of about 75,000 tons per month.

In 1917, Ludendorff failed. Yet he tried again in 1918. The moderate element in the German High Command wanted to stand on the defensive in the West, to reinforce it with the seasoned German troops whish had just annihilated the Russian army, and then set to work to organize economically Eastern Europe and Southern Russia. They calculated that the Allies would then have to hurl themselves fruitlessly against the reinforced Hindenburg Line, and that when they were tired of losing life in this way, Germany would be able to force them to make a peace which would make her dominant in all Europe east of the Rhine as the price for evacuating Belgium and Northern France.

But Ludendorff, faithful to the Prussian military tradition, would have none of it. It was, for him, world empire or downfall. So he staked everything on victory through the gigantic offensive of March, 1918, hoping to drive the British into the sea and the French south of Paris before American aid on land could be effective. He failed, though again he only just failed. Then caught on the recoil by the masterly generalship of Marshall Foch using the seasoned veteran of France, Britain and the Dominions, and the indispensable aid of your own intrepid divisions, Germany went not to world power but to downfall. Today we hear exactly the same story. Dr. Goebbels said only a fortnight ago that the issue before Germany was world empire or downfall.

That is why the Allies think that National Socialist Germany and not Communist Russia is the centre of the struggle. And that is why we believe that, unless some unexpected change occurs, there will be a terrific attack on France, and on the bases of British naval and aerial power as soon as the weather improves, in the hope of winning world empire in single decisive battle.

LORD TWEEDSMUIR PRAISED AS MAN

Rev. D. T. McClintock Speaks on Life of Former Governor - General at Rotary Luncheon

The late Lord Tweedsmuir as an author, statesman and Christian gentleman was fittingly portrayed to the Belleville Rotary Club at its luncheon meeting yesterday, by Rev. D. T. McClintock of Tabernacle Church. "Typical of Lord Tweedsmuir's high idealism," said the speaker, was his declaration that "the right character is more essential than the right mind."

Briefly reviewing biographical particulars, Mr. McClintock told of John Buchan's birth near Perth, Scotland, his education at Glasgow University and Oxford University, and his subsequent rise to fame as an author. He had become the most distinguished writer of a writing family with some fifty works of fiction, biography and history to his credit.

John Buchan had written his first novel while at Oxford. He had gone as private secretary to Lord Milner in South Africa and while there wrote "Prester John" which won for him considerable distinction.

Later had come the appointment as correspondent of the London Times at Haig's headquarters during the Great War, from which he was drafted to head the British Intelligence Department. Following the war he had written an official his story of the British effort in that conflict.

Broke Down Barriers

He had settled at the seven-hundred-year-old Elsfield Manor, near Oxford, when he was called to his greatest distinction, that of Governor-General of Canada. In surveying the prospect of that responsible position he had declared: "I must help to break down every barrier that crosses Canada."

Lord Tweedsmuir's period of office here, said Mr. McClintock, was punctuated with his long journeys in which he had lived with the common people and had done much to promote better understanding.

Genius, clarity of thought, high idealism and a sense of deep spiritualism had been evident in all Lord Tweedsmuir's writings," said the speaker. He had won a large reader audience without resorting to the dirt, which marks so many of the works of popular authors of today. His characters always were interesting and clean minded.

"I knew Lord Tweedsmuir well," concluded Mr. McClintock, "but he didn't know me—that is the glory of a book which wins the friendship of readers."

Mr. McClintock was introduced by H. R. Moorman, and the thanks of Rotary for an excellent address was expressed by J. R. Pickering.

The extent of the Belleville Rotary Club's participation in the commemoration of Rotary Observance Week elsewhere was revealed in the list of speakers and other clubs and institutions, including District Governor Owen Herity at Watertown, N.Y. and Kingston Rotary Clubs, Art Young of Cobourg, O. A. Pinkston at Campbellford, and President Howard Clarke at Albert College.

Some Interesting Facts About London

Statisticians divide London into two distinct areas. There is first the Administrative County of London, ruled from County Hall. Outside there is the remainder of London, whose population is approximately the same as that of the county.

Thus the total population of Greater London is more than 8½ millions says a writer in the British Family Herald. New York with 7,000,000, comes next.

London is more populous than Berlin, Paris and Rome combined. The people of London outnumber the inhabitants of Sweden and Norway put together; also the population of Abyssinia or Belgium.

When Nelson was dying at Trafalgar, his fellow-countrymen numbered fewer than the people of London today. And in the spacious days of Queen Elizabeth the population of England was smaller by half than that of twentieth-century London.

These are the masses of London. These are the 4,000,000 men and 4,500,000 women who inhabit the mightiest metropolis the world has ever known.

In the Administrative County of London the annual budget is close on £40,000,000 (about $200,000,000). Egypt's national revenue is £36,000,000. Greece's £32,000,000 ($160,000,000), and Denmark's £23,000,000 ($115,000,000).

These are some of the remarkable facts from the forty-first volumes of "London Statistics," recently published by the London County Council; they deal chiefly with the years 1937 and 1938. Here are some other facts and figures.

Employment

The rateable value of Greater London's 693 suare miles is £102,000,000 ($510,000,000). This includes the precious square mile of the City, which is valued at more than £8,000,000 ($40,000,000).

Largest of all the trades in London is the building trade: 237,000 workers are engaged. Next comes the hotel business. Waiters, barmaids and the invisible army of housemaids make up a working total of 184,000 souls. Then there are 127,000 in general engineering. In publishing and printing 110,000 Londoners are employed.

And the smaller trades? There are 75,000 milliners, 74,000 local government officials, 73,000 motor and aircraft factory hands, 61,000 in gas and electricity, 58,000 running buses and tramcars, 55,000 blackcoaters in commerce and finance, 54,000 in tailoring, 51,000 in central government offices, 37,000 railwaymen, 26,000 in the drink industry, 24,000 in shipping, 19,000 in farming, forestry and market-gardening, 18,000 electrical engineers, 13,000 in the tobacco and enuff industry, and 8,000 make musical instruments.

These are a few of the limitless number of trades that employ the people of London.

Transportation

It is estimated that half of all London passengers go by bus; one-quarter go by railway and rather fewer than the other quarter by tramcar, trolleybus and motorcoach. Taxis account for some. There are 8,000 of these in London. They are outnumbered by the 1,100,000 private cars and 600,000 bicycles.

When do they travel? Twenty-three percent of the traffic on the Underground goes between 7.30 and 10 a.m. Thirty-three per cent between 4 and 7 p.m.

There is far from sufficient room for the mighty population housed in Greater London. There are 540,000 people living in London who have less than half a room apiece. There are 15,000 people in London who are quite homeless. Many of these are young men, come to London with hope and remaining without. Of those who find their night's rest on the Embankment, two-thirds are under thirty-five years of age.

Places of Entertainment

Cinemas far outnumber theatres in the London area. There are 391 licensed cinemas and only 86 theatres and music halls. There are 26 dance-halls and skating-rinks, 58 boxing and concert halls and 30 swimming baths licensed for entertainment.

There are 5,323 premises licensed to sell liquor. For every 809 persons in London there is one place where they can get a drink. This ratio varies considerably throughout London. In Wandsworth 1793 go to every licensed house. In the City of London the number is only 42. There are 1,084 public houses in the Tower licensing district, 54 in the Hampstead district.

Contributing to the health of the people is the open space that can be reserved for the purpose. There is available in Greater London 102 square miles of open space for the recreation of its citizens, out of a total of 700 square miles. This means that for every 169 Londoners there is an acre of open space available.

Police Force

London's police are wonderful, our visitors assure us. Including the City police, a completely autonomous and separate force from the Metropolitan police, there are well over 20,000 policemen in London. More than 19,000 of these are members of the Metropolitan force, ruled from the Home Office and Scotland Yard.

The Metropolitan force cost the taxpayers over £9,000,000 ($45,000,000) a year. The city force contents itself with £500,000 ($2,500,000). This last sum is very little less than the cost of the Manchester or Birmingham police.

Metropolitan Police sent 61,718 sets of finger-prints for identification in 1937, and 24,318 were identified.

Interesting Facts

It costs £257 ($1,375) a year to light each mile of London's streets, and there are 2,333 miles of them.

The Port of London is served by 314 pilots, who earn on average a net income of £800 a year.

Daily War Survey

By The Canadian Press

While arrival of No. 110 Army Co-operation Squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force in England is another indication of the Empire's growing air power, it is only indirectly related to the vast expansion program of which the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, now coming into operation in Canada, forms a part.

The squadron now in England is not destined to form part of or serve with the Royal Air Force or under the Air Command. It will serve with the First Canadian Division and subsequent divisions if and when they may be sent overseas. It is directly a Canadian undertaking.

The Commonwealth Air Training Plan, on the other hand, is a co-operative undertaking between Canada, the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand. Canada assumes responsibility for training the fliers who will be recruited in the three Dominions and who will, on completing their training, enter the Royal Air Force.

Objective of the plan is to establish an overwhelming superiority in the air over the enemy forces in view of the possibility of aerial warfare on a large scale.

An army co-operation squadron, as the name implies, is an adjunct of the ground forces. It does not ordinarily conduct independent operations such as long range reconnaissance, bombing or fighting. It is the eyes and ears of the ground forces.

Thus No. 110 Squadron, like the army co-operations squadrons of the Royal Air Force will, in action, be under the direction of the commander of the land forces it serves while other air force squadrons are under the Air Command which is distinct from both the army and navy commands.

Its job will be to obtain such information about the enemy as the commander of the Canadian land forces may require and to give him what assistance aircraft can give in the way of offensive operations against enemy land forces with machine gun fire and bombing.

Written for R.C.A.F. Squadron Song Begins to Gain Wide Popularity

London, Feb. 27—(CP)—Wide popularity began to develop today for "We've Got a Lovely War to Win," a song written specially for No. 110 Army Cooperation Squadron of The Royal Canadian Air Force, which arrived in England yesterday.

The song was composed by Flying-Officer William G. Middleboro of Owen Sound, Ont., in association with Pilot-Officer Harry A. Hornell of Montreal.

These are the words:—

"Pompey, Darius and Cyrus
"Were all defeated one by one;
"Genghis Khan and Alexander
"Really lost the wars they won;
"There's a mediaeval tyrant
"Living in the world today;
"He will never last as long as they did
"Now that we are on the way.

(CHORUS)

"Up, boys, into the blue sky.
"Up, boys, that's where the foe is!
"Up, boys!
"We've got a war to win.
"We'll make history tremble
"With our might, and assemble
"On the streets of Hitler's old Berlin.
"We're the eyes of the forces,
"Instrumental resources.
"Without us action can't begin,
"And when we convince the Nazi,
"His government will collapse.
"In every house there'll be a maiden—waitin'.
"We've got a lovely war to win."

Flying-Officer Middleboro has taken out a copyright for his song, but no arrangements have yet been made for publication.

Kidney Acids Rob Your Rest

Many people never seem to get a good night's rest. They turn and toss—lie awake and count sheep. Often they blame it on "nerves" when it may be their kidneys. Healthy kidneys filter poisons from the blood. If they are faulty and fail, poisons stay in the system and sleeplessness, headache, backache often follow. If you don't sleep well, try Dodd's Kidney Pills—for half a century the favorite remedy. 103

War Zone Broadening Says Yorkshire Post

Leeds, England, Feb. 27—(CP)—Possible extension of the war between Germany and the Allies to Scandinavia, becoming one with the Russo-Finnish conflict, was discussed Monday by the military correspondent of the Yorkshire Post.

"The position is obscure but the points are distinct," he said. "The war zone is broadening. Possession of the Norwegian coast is the future gage of battle.

"Can we forestall events and help Finland more than we are doing without going to war with Russia? The case for intervention gathers force every day and against it has to be considered what Germany would gain by dispersing the Allied forces over the world."

Allied intervention would be effective, he said, only if Norway and Sweden entered the war at Finland's side.

"In whatever way the northern problem drifts," the military correspondent continued, "the main concern of Germany is the Swedish ore fields, and these may be the cause of war.. The ore is vital to her and she will fight for it. If iron ore became as scarce as oil, defeat would face her.

"The operations in Finland cannot fail to have some effect on Hitler's decision about a spring offensive. To get locked up with the Allied armies now would be a false move, in view of the possibilities in the north."

British Press Enthusiastically Endorses Allies' War Aims

Chamberlain Praised for Restating What the War Aims Are

NO CHANGE IN AIMS

London, Feb. 27— (CP) —The British press today gave enthusiastic endorsement to the Allies' war aims as outlined by Prime Minister Chamberlain in his speech at Birmingham Saturday.

"We are assured of the Allied power to defeat the Fuehrer's crazed ambition to dominate the world," the Daily Telegraph said. "But the purpose of our 'crusade goes beyond the overthrow of his tyranny.

"No one who lives in a free country, as Mr. Chamberlain remarked, can doubt now what the war aims of the Allies are. His own full and vigorous restatement of them changed not a jot of what he and M. Daladier have said before."

The News Chronicle said:— "The Prime Minister did well to restate our main war aims in clear and concrete terms......from Munich (where Adolf Hitler spoke) came a very different speech. The world has not found the Fuehrer's latest utterance either confident or statesmanlike."

The Daily Herald said:— "The Labor party and the Daily Herald would welcome peace by negotiation. But this must be with German rulers whose word can be trusted." It said Hitler tried to cheer up the depressed German people by claiming to have enlisted "A new ally" on the Nazi side—Providence."

The Daily Mail said that if Hitler's speech was "The kind of talk (United States Undersecretary of State Sumner) Welles is going to hear in Berlin, he will have no difficulty in making up his mind quickly that the prospects for peace in Europe are still remote—a harsh lesson which we, too, must derive."

During Welles' visit, the editorial predicted. "German propaganda will work full power among the neutral nations and in this country to persuade the world that Germany is opening, and the Allies are barring, the road to peace....".

Dr. C. A. Myers Speaks At 118th Anniversary Bridge St. Church S. S.

Fitting celebration of the 118th anniversary of the birth of Bridge Street United Church Sunday School was observed Sunday when Rev. Dr. Charles A. Myers, Associate Secretary of Religious Education for the United Church, Toronto, addressed both services and a special Sunday School service in the afternoon.

A review of the history of the school which featured about the late Senator Billa Flint who came from Brockville to Belleville in 1829, was the highlight of the afternoon gathering. In 1830, it was brought out, a census was made of the village and over two hundred children enrolled in the school. The names of the two hundred scholars are retained in the church's history. Many descendants of these "two hundred" are still living in this city and district.

At the close of the afternoon session, Dr. Myers gave teachers and officers a brief address.

The evening service was conducted by the Young People's Union, addressed by the guest speaker after which a forum was held in the Sunday School parlors. The history of Bridge Street Church covers the early history of the city.

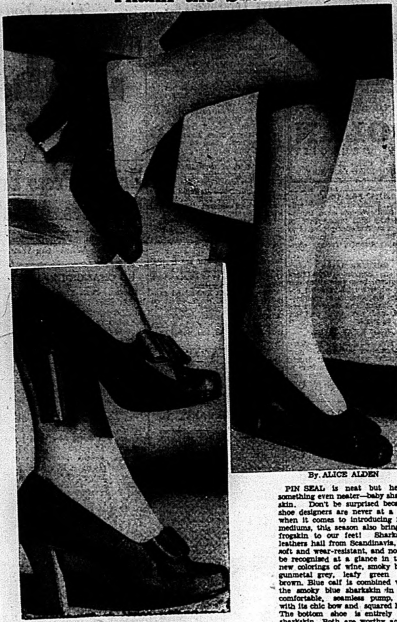
Thank the Shark!



By. ALICE ALDEN

PIN SEAL is neat but here's something even neater—baby sharkskin. Don't be surprised because shoe designers are never at a loss when it comes to introducing new mediums, this season also bringing frogskin to our feet! Sharkskin leathers hail from Scandinavia, are soft and wear-resistant, and not to be recognized at a glance in their new colorings of wine, smoky blue, gunmetal grey, leafy green and brown. Blue calf is combined with the smoky blue sharkskin in the comfortable, seamless pump, top, with its chic bow and squared heel. The bottom shoe is entirely of sharkskin. Both are worthy accessories for Spring's tailored and afternoon suits.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

The Perfection We Never Marry

It would be downright funny, if it were not for the tragic element women get out of books which reflect problems that beset their own lives. Women who wouldn't think of wasting a second on best sellers go hungrily after biographies of the great and the near great, which have to do with philandering husbands.

She was the typical "little woman" no need to describe her, who shamefacedly numbled her request for a recent work on Charles Dickens having to do with certain primrose-path straying on the part of the great novelist. The book was out, so she then asked for "Napoleon as lover and husband". She got that and doubtless is engaged at this moment in comparing the philandering of her own Mr. Smith or Jones with that of the French Emperor.

I could not refrain from asking the young lady at the information desk what type of book represented the favorite reading of the tired housewife.

The answer came with a twinkle: "She likes to read about great men who have the same weaknesses as her husband. Take the case of Charles Dickens. In his youth he was in love with a girl named Maria Beadnell, and when his marriage turned sour he was under the delusion if he'd only married Maria, life would have been one grand, sweet song'"

I reflected silently on the case of poor Mrs. Dickens with whom the world is beginning to sympathize. After she had borne her gifted husband ten children and put up with his tantrums, he heard again of his long lost Maria and was frantic until he met her.

But time had dealt with Maria as it had with Charles. She was fair, fat and forty. Worse, she tried to be arch and girlish, the way she had been at eighteen. And Dickens wasted scant ceremony in getting rid of his first love. There was another love with which this story is not concerned.

On the way home I began to think of all the letters which had come to this column about husbands' Marias, and wondered if the "perfect" love wasn't always the girl Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones just didn't marry. And I thought what a splendid thing it would be if, like the great novelist, all the husbands in the world were given a chance to meet their long lost loves and could see with their own eyes that they had probaby grown as fat and frumpish' as the "little women" at home to whom they were married.

Of course, there is really no such person as the dream girl men don't marry. Like Charles Dickens' Maria, the tooth of time had done for her the same thing as it had done for Charles Dickens' wife. But they keep harping back, these husbands, "if I had only married Anne, (Betsy, Genevieve or Myrtle) everything would have been different."

So few of us have the philosophy to take the goods the gods provide and make the best of them.

While we are talking about these dream partners, please let me say they don't all belong to the men. The ladies, bless 'em, have just as many sentimental regrets. A staid matron, holding in her hand the gavel with which she was about to call to order a terribly important meeting of other staid matrons, whispered to me, as she passed by my chair: "Last night I dreamed of George. You remember George, don't you? We were engaged when I was 18. If I'd only married him, how different life would have been." I was mean enough to add: "If you had married George, you'd probably be calling to order more conferences than you're addressing at the present."

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

How to Rate a Man's Love by His Manners

"How do you know it's love?" was the heart-interest theme of a recent conference held in Los Angeles and presided over by Dr. Paul Popenoe, famous director of the Institute of Family Relations.

And how did Dr. Popenoe answer this intriguing question? Listen:

"The young woman who wants to know whether a man really loves her when he says he does, should apply a performance test.

"And here are a group of questions that the girl can ask herself to determine the answers:

1—Does he sit in his car in front of her house and honk the horn until she appears?

2—When he enters a room does he picks out the best chair and plump himself into it?

3—Does he always blame someone when things go wrong?

4—Is he always seeking sympathy?

5—Does he boast, or believe, that he is irresistible to women?"

Every one of these five questions is concerned with good manners, every one of them is concerned with consideration for other people, and consideration for other people is good manners.

Take that first question, for instance "Does he sit in his car in front of her house and honk the horn until she appears?" In this column I am continually beseeching young men not to drive up to a girl's house and honk the horn to announce their arrival. I have based my plea on the fact that this procedure is unmannerly. Now here's Dr. Popenoe who says that it's not only unmannerly, but shows that the young man doesn't love the girl!

Lack of consideration is also the feature highlighted in the other questions. In fact, Dr. Popenoe emphatically maintained that if the answers to these five questions is "Yes", "then it can be taken as final that the man is too much in love with himself to be able to love anyone else."

Here's food for thought, girls, and men, too, on love and manners!

Mrs. R. J. Leonard Celebrates Her Eightieth Birthday

Mrs. Robert J. Leonard celebrated her eightieth birthday at the home of Mrs. L. Call the Doctor if Baby Has an Earache

When your child has an earache, don't try home remedies—it may be caused by an abscess or mastoid infection. Explaining how these start and what to do, Dr. Charles Gilmore Kerley, noted child specialist, writes in McCall's for March:

"When I am asked how mastoid infection in young children usually starts, I can only answer that it is most likely to begin with grandfather's snuffles or Uncle Joe's. At any rate, the germ of the 'cold' which spreads until it wreaks the final havoc, often is brought by some person of importance whom the young mother doesn't dare cross even when he insists on kissing the baby.

"In a day or two baby has a running nose with a slight temperature, perhaps as much as 101 degrees. Next day it goes up still higher and the youngster's throat is inflamed. Then comes earache and crying at night. Where the baby is too young to tell where the pain is, his cries are often attributed to colic. But they continue, and the doctor is finally called, frequently to find the eardrum already red and distended with pus. Baby is lucky if the doctor arrives before the infection has spread to the cavities in the mastoid bone.

Start as a Cold

"Most mastoid infections and ear troubles follow this pattern: They do not begin in the ear itself. The germs do not enter through the outside ear, as many people think. They start their ravages by lodging as a 'cold' in the nose or the throat. From there they travel through an inside passage called the Eustachian tube, into the middle ear, situated in the bone directly behind the eardrum. Sometimes, indeed, the bacteria in the nasal passages are violently forced there when the child's nose is blown too hard, especially when both nostrils are compressed.

"In the middle ear the pus may gather until, as in the case described, the eardrum is inflamed and bulging and the ear aches from the pressure. This is the condition known as an ear abscess, and the way the doctor can relieve it is to puncture the eardrum and drain off the pus. The operation need not be dreaded. If it is properly performed, the eardrum heals perfectly and hearing is normal.

Infection May Spread

"The real danger is more apt to lie not in operating but in failure to operate soon enough. In this case, if the pus is not removed, the infection may spread to the nearby air cells of the mastoid bone. Then the bone itself may become infected, and the only remedy is the far more difficult operation of chiseling through the bone and curetting out the diseased parts, much as the dentist removes the decayed portion of a tooth. Fortunately, today this operation, serious as it is, is usually successful. It has been my experience, covering many years, that in such cases delay in operating may turn out to be a very dangerous procedure. For when infection reaches the mastoid, there is always the danger that it may be carried to the brain, resulting in a still more serious complication, meningitis.

"So if your baby with a cold cries repeatedly in the night, don't hesitate; call the doctor at once. Until he comes you may relieve the pain in baby's ear by resting it on a warm water bottle. Or if you wish, you may use a medicine dropper to put in the ear a few drops of warm sweet oil (tested first on the arm to be sure that it is not too hot). Under no circumstances, however, should you try to put a finger, a match or any other instrument into the ear canal. Even the system of cleaning out the ears with cotton wrapped on the end of a toothpick is dangerous. The old rule still holds good 'Never put into your ear anything smaller than your elbow.'

"Of course, an earache does not necessarily mean that a child has an ear abscess or a mastoid infection. Pain, felt near the ear, may come from teething or from mumps. But from whatever cause, an earache should never be home treated."

St. Andrew's Y. P., Stirling, Sponsor Skating Party

Stirling—Nearly three hundred skaters were present at the annual skating party sponsored by the St. Andrew's Young Peoples' Guild on Thursday evening. Beside a large attendance of local skaters, visitors were present from all parts of the Kingston Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church. With excellent skating music provided for the event by Messrs. C. Fox and J. Ormiston, skating was enjoyed until ten. Prize winners included Miss Dorothy Eggleton, Pte. Fred Dainard and Mr. Carter; Miss Eggleton and Pte. Dainard being acclaimed in the opinion of the judges as the best skating couple.

Luncheon Enjoyed

After the skating luncheon was served by the local society in the church parlours of St. Andrew's Church followed by brief speeches by Arthur Duncan, Roy Juby, Rev. W. J. Walker of Belleville, Rev. W. H. J. Walker of Stirling and others. While luncheon was in progress, the Presbytery Executive body of the Young People's Society, held a short business meeting in the vestry. About two hundred guests attended the luncheon and the committee in charge of this branch of work are to be complimented on the manner in which the large gathering were so efficiently served. The function closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Transfusions

Impressive evidence that blood serum, the colorless liquid part of blood, has possibilities of being the first effective "blood substitute" in transfusions, is presented in the Journal of the American Medical Association by three Chicago physicians. It appears to them to have even some practical advantages over blood, because the serum can be given in large amounts, does not have to conform to certain "types", and can be preserved more easily for emergency usage.

Any development in connection with transfusions is of the greatest interest and importance. Countless lives are being saved every day by transfusions, and the extent to which they are being used to keep children alive is little understood and appreciated by laymen.

In fact, I was somewhat surprised myself when I recently visited a children's hospital in a large city and saw and heard some of the achievements due to transfusions. For out in the frontier country where I have practised all my life, blood transfusions in both adult and child cases are comparatively new.

When I went through college, over 30 years ago, blood-letting was still practised. I may have been more sold on this form of treatment than most doctors of my age because of influence of my father, also a country doctor, who practised 50 years ago in one community. In his day blood letting was just about the favorite treatment. Medical teaching of the time supported it.

I still have instruments for blood letting, or wet cupping, as it was sometimes called, used by my father. The bleeding was generally started in the arm. You would tie something around the upper arm so the flow of blood could be controlled. Then a slit was made in a vein or an artery below the turniquet with a special kind of knife. The instrument my father used for wet-cupping was composed of a series of blades arranged so you could regulate the depth of the slice or slices.

Blood letting was supposed to be good for almost everything. Although, as I said, my father influenced my use of it, it was also true that people were used to it as a treatment and expected it. Many an old timer then lost faith in you as a healer completely if you didn't do some blod-letting. And I think it was beneficial in the case of heavy, over-weight people suffering from pneumonia.

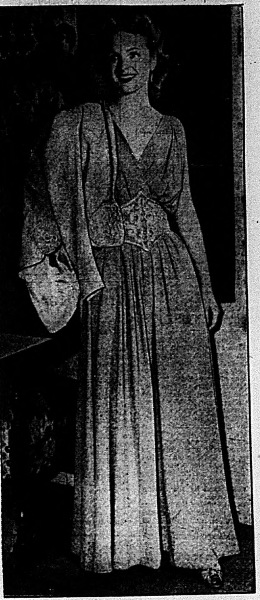
Such people usually have too much blood, anyway, so I would take off about a pint. This would relieve the strain on the heart and the patient would be more comfortable. The treament seemed to give relief to people suffering from high blood pressure. I have seen large quantities taken from such people successfully.

Besides these types of cases, I had some old patients who used to come to me every spring to be bled. Some people believed in sulphur and molasses to clear up the system and purify the blood, but others thought they should be bled in the spring. They always claimed that they felt better after the wet-cupping.

For a long, long time after the value of transfusions came to be known, I was uneasy about resorting to them. I hadn't learned anything about their technique in school, so I had to pick it up myself. Nowadays a physician makes himself up-to-date on such things in clinics and post-graduate courses. I have less hesitancy about them now, but out in my country district they are not so simple a matter as they are in hospitals.

There has been an urgent need for an effective blood substitute. Even in large hospitals and in large cities where blood can be secured with relative promptness there are situations in which immediate availability and injection of a good blood substitute would improve treatment. This new serum technique promises to be just what is needed.

Belted in Style



By ALICE ALDEN

THE FOCAL point of many midseason gowns is the girdle or belt, either separate or stitched onto the material. Wearing it requires reasonably trim hips but not the ultraslim waist so essential for highbusted silhouettes. Unlike the wide suede or gold kid belt, this soft type in the same fabric as the dress divides the torso without exaggerating its lack of perfection. One of our American designers tops the lime green crepe pictured with a salmon jacket of peau d'ange, embroidering it like the girdle, with gilt and sequins. The jacket is sufficiently long to cover the belt when fastened—in fact, a good length for other dresses in the wardrobe. Let's not forget that we pay for a jacket and should consider its usefulness in general as well as its tie-up with a particular style.

Decorating the Beach

By ALICE ALDEN

THE CUSTOM of taking the sun along with the water has resulted in picturesque beach get-ups. Gone the black bloomer suit, enter the sequin. Midriffs are exposed, throats covered with necklaces. Ankles and wrists are laden with bracelets, finger and toe-nails lacquered in keeping. Some of the newest native jewelry is pictured today, Muchacha seeds tipped with chili beads, an idea an American designer picked up from Bali. Most effective, perhaps, with a native sun dress, the set is also suggested for Palm Beach prints or home town prints, depending on location. Sea horse clips and earrings and all manner of shells are other decorative bits on the market. Better do some collecting now with summer in mind.

Halloway Couple Honored by Friends On Golden Jubilee

On Monday evening last, the neighbors and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Spencer, Turner Settlement, to do them honour on the occasion of their golden wedding.

After a sociable time was spent and games enjoyed their neighbor, Mr. B. Bleecker acted as chairman and a presentation of flowers and twin chairs was made to the happy couple, the following address being read by Mrs. Claude MacInnes:

Halloway, Ont., Feb. 19, 1940

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Spencer:

On this evening of your golden wedding anniversary we your friends and neighbors have gathered in your home to spend a few friendly hours with you. We felt we could not let this mile-post in your life pass by without some recognition of your true and loyal friendship through these years.

It has been well said that friendly communities make a nation, friendly neighbors a community, and friendly people a neighborhood. Thus we see to each and everyone falls a responsibility to carry on at home, a life full of service for others, an influence for right and Godly living and an eye that keeps an eager, bright glow fixed on the cloud with a silver lining.

To you, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer, we pay tribute this evening for in no way have you shirked your duty. Your home has always been open to your many friends and we have benefited by your many thoughtful acts of kindness. The service for your Master has been well exemplified by your everyday living and will remain as a light to guide others in the right path. True neighbors, indeed, with honest upright, loyal and kind hearts we have found you and it is with a sense of our appreciation for those characteristics, we help you to celebrate this event.

Anniversaries are memory days. Our mind drifts back to fifty years ago, when as bride and groom you started out on life's journey, with a bright and eager desire to enjoy life to its brim, but, also, life has its sorrows as well as its joys, which seem to come alike to one and all. We know there have been many days of enjoyment and for you we are glad. Sickness has, at times been your lot and we wish you to know we thought of you then and hoped recovery would come soon and bring welcome relief. Our thoughts are with you now and in the days that lie ahead. We can no better express ourselves than in these few lines:

"You've lived a half a hundred years
Together with your joys and tears,
Perhaps, but none the less,
Full fifty years of happiness.
And as your journey you pursue,
May fortune smile upon you two
And every moment of the way,
Be like this golden wedding day."

Now as a little token of our esteem we ask you to accept these gifts. May they remind you that as years roll on, we think of you and hope that each day will be filled with health, joy and happiness.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors, Lorne C. Reid, Albert Carson.

Mr. Bleecker then called on Mr. and Mrs. Spencer and others for an account of what happened fifty years ago. This was followed by a program and refreshments.

The happy gathering broke up with everyone wishing Mr. and Mrs. Spencer many more years of happy wedded life.

Picton Pupils Enjoy Annual Ice Carnival

Picton — The annual carnival of York St. School was a much enjoyed event at the school rink on Friday evening. The merchants of the town co-operated splendidly in the donating of fine prizes for the event. One hundred children in costume competed on the well-lighted ice. The parents of the neighborhood cheered from the sidelines. Almost every child secured a prize, as prizes were given for skating, costumes and later, amateur musical numbers in the school-house. The teachers, Mr. Don Walters and Miss Winnifred Wycott, made every effort to see that parents and pupils had a most enjoyable evening. At nine-thirty, hot cocoa and hot-dogs were served. Among those assisting in serving were, Mrs. Wm. McWilliams, Mrs. T. Vestervelt, Mrs. B. Cunningham, Mrs. W. Thompson, Mrs. S. Thompson, Mrs. H. Hunt and Mrs. H. Demille.

Mr. Gay Welsh has purchased the home of the late Mrs. Fred Watson on Queen Street and will take possession early in March.

A very pleasant event of Friday evening was the shower tendered Mrs. Thos. Perry, a recent bride. at the home of her mother, Mrs. E. R. Lockwood, Main Street. About forty girl friends or the bride enjoyed a pleasant evening with cards and Chinese checkers. Later the bride was showered with lovely miscellaneous gifts, for which she graciously expressed her appreciation. Refreshments were served and social hour was enjoyed.

Staving Off the Year Marks

ANNE SHIRLEY . . . knows how living habits affect hair health.

By HELEN POLLETT

WHEN THE hair turns white, it is because the coloring cells have disappeared. Why that happens nobody knows. The shaft is like a glass tube, the pigment inside providing the color. Little cells go blooey and that's all of that.

When the first silver threads appear, check up on your living habits. Do you fret your gizzard pin? Are you wakeful at night, getting up in the morning feeling like a wreck? Is your appetite off key? All these troubles have a depressing effect upon the health of the hair.

If a beauty budget can stand it, have a series of professional scalp treatments twice a year. Home friction isn't prolonged enough. All scalp specialists agree that massage is helpful. Little silk threads live on the blood streams; if circulation isn't up to snuff, the shafts starve to death.

Use a bland soap when shampooing. Avoid heavy setting lotions. Brush the hair often even though the finger wave goes limp. Some cases of falling hair have been corrected by taking cod-liver oil, which carries food elements that rush to the aid of the brain foliage.

When selecting a foundation cosmetic, get one that is slightly darker than your skin; it will hide any little discolorations that may be lurking around the facial premises. Rub it in well. Powder also should be slightly darker. Use light powder and it tells the world it's right there with you.

When the complexion is florid, the cosmetic calcimine should carry a rose cast; blending rachelle and flesh will produce a satisfactory tone. Blondes usually need a cream tint in the powder. Aged ladies whose skins have softened and become transparent do well to use mauve.

Tweed United Church Officials Honor W. S. Gordon, Retiring S.S. Supt.

Tweed — A short time ago, after faithful service extending over a period of 36 years, Mr. W. S. Gordon found it necessary to relinquish his office as Superintendent of Tweed United Church Sunday School. His resignation presented to the Board of Management was accepted with sincere regret and a resolution of appreciation of Mr. Gordon's unusual period of service was passed and incorporated into the minutes of the Official Board.

Subsequent to this resolution and the natural consequence of it, was a surprise party at Mr. Gordon's home on Friday evening, when the officers and teachers gathered to express in a more tangible manner their regret at his resignation and appreciation of his lengthy service.

Following an enjoyable sing-song conducted by Mr. S. H. Connor, and which included an enjoyable guitar and mouth-organ selection by Miss June Brown, Mr. A. W. McGuire, B.A., I.P.S., who is Mr. Gordon's successor as Superintendent of the Sunday School, took charge of the proceedings. "No one", said Mr. McGuire, "realizes how onerous are the duties of another until he assumes them himself. The duties of Sunday School Superintendent are no exception to this rule. No doubt Mr. Gordon, on more than one occasion during his thirty-six years of service, felt the burden of his responsibility as being very great, almost too great, and would gladly have relinquished it long ere this. He should feel a great deal of satisfaction in having performed these duties over such an unusually long period, with an especially satisfying feature being the fact that his service was a service to the young, than which there is no more important work in which one can engage."

Mr. McGuire called upon Rev. H. L. Morrison, pastor of the United Church, who read the address into which was incorporated the resolution previously alluded to. Mrs. S. G. Way and Mrs. Lincoln Elliott, two of the teachers of the Sunday School, presented Mr. Gordon with a beautiful mantel clock with Westminster chimes.

Mr. Gordon, completely taken by surprise, was deeply touched by the expression of appreciation, for which he expressed his sincere thanks. He briefly recalled experiences of the past, nearly four decades, and referred to the loyal co-operation of teachers and officers, past and present. Names, such as the Easterbrooks, the Tuttles, the Martins, the Houstons, the Prestons, and many others will always be linked in his memory with those early years of his service, said Mr. Gordon. In concluding Mr. Gordon expressed the hope and belief that his successor, Mr. McGuire, would enjoy the same loyal and faithful cooperation of his officers that had been accorded him.

As Superintendent of the United Church Sunday School since 1903, Mr. Gordon has enjoyed the confidence of his fellow workers throughout the province of Ontario, who have bestowed on him several of the highest honours within the control of the Religious Education Council. In 1910, he was sent as a delegate to the World Sunday School Convention in Washington, D. C. Later he attended the International Sunday School Convention at Birmingham, Alabama, U.S.A., as an accredited delegate. Elected as President of the Religious Educational Council of the Province of Ontario, Mr. Gordon presided over conventions held in Peterboro and London, Ontario. Another important office to which Mr. Gordon was elected was that of Secretary-treasurer of Centre Hastings Sunday School Association. He held this office for three years during which Centre Hastings won the Provincial Banner for the best organized area in the Province.

Several boys belonging to the Sunday School took an active part in the Older Boys' Parliament, one being elected Speaker and another Leader of the Opposition. Many of the ideas which made Tweed United Church Sunday School one of the leading Schools in the province were gleaned by Mr. Gordon from addresses and discussions which took place at these conventions and conferences, and which he introduced into the local School and carried to success with, the loyal cooperation of an efficient staff of officers and teachers.

Miss Gladys Gordon, B.A., of Toronto University spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Gordon.

Miss Doris Houston and Mr. Wm. Burgoyne of Belleville were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Rath. On Sunday morning at Tweed United Church, Miss Houston, a former member of the Choir, sang most beautifully, "Green Pastures" by Wilfred Sanderson.

Mrs. B. C. Salisbury of Plainfield spent a few days with her daughter, Mrs. S. H. Connor.

Miss Audrey Prust of Orillia, spent the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Prust.

Sulphide school bus which transported the High School hockey players to Norwood on Saturday night ran out of gas on the return trip three miles east of Marmora. Several of the boys walked back to Marmora for gasoline resulting in a late arrival home.

THREE-MINUTE JOURNEY TO THE ARGENTINE:

A Passport to Splendor

By TEMPLE MANNING

FABULOUS and then some is that fascinating country, Argentina, a land of variety. A ticket to the Argentine is more than a ticket to another country. It is a passport to splendor, magnificence and a glorious way of living; of piercingly high mountains, of lush valleys and green orchards; of pampas so boundless that they seem like a deserted world, and of a city so splendid that words of praise, however extravagant, seem inadequate.

If you visit Buenos Aires, you'll find that the streets of Buenos Aires are more reminiscent of Paris than of any other city. You'll be entranced by the shops on the Calle Florida; the beauty and splendor of Palermo; the variety of architecture, the bustle and the air of wealth about the most famous thoroughfare of the city, the Avenida da Mayo; the palaces and the houses of the great families on the Avenida Alvear, houses of splendor with huge salons and family portraits. And you'll never forget the city's amazing views.

You'll want to ride in the Palermo; you'll think you are riding in the Bois. Armed with the proper introductions, you'll play tennis at the Club Argentino or at Hurlingham, the latter very much like its namesake, the famous polo club just outside London. And you may be invited to the Jockey Club, something that exceeds, in its splendor, anything thought up by Hollywood.

Buenos Aires, while retaining its own individuality, is reminiscent of many cities. Its broad, tree-lined avenues and boulevards, and its sparkling gaiety, make one think of Paris. Its skyscrapers remind one of New York or Chicago. La Boca, with its cheap dance halls and such, is reminiscent of the Vieux Port at Marseilles. Its monuments and statuary suggest Berlin, and somehow there's something of Liverpool about the docks. And Palerma, where thousands of little children come each day to play, reminds one of fairyland.

Lovely Parks

Palermo has several lakes, a beautiful rose garden, a formal English garden, incredibly beautiful Andalusian patios, playgrounds, miles of drives and trails.

Plaza del Congreso, Buenos Aires

Then there is Lazema, a lovely park with a sunken amphitheatre for open air performances.

The Teatro Colon is one of the largest and most beautiful opera houses, not only in the western world, but in all the world. Interesting, too, is the Hotel de Immigrantes, where immigrants are received, examined and kept for a week. The Cathedral reminds one of the Madeleine in Paris, and there are many other lovely churches, including the Russian Orthodox Church, its typical architecture appearing strange in this new world city.

Fashion Flashes

FUN AND SUN is the keynote of a southern winter vacation. Get both wearing a play suit of striped silk broadcloth, red and blue on light yellow. The skirt that ties on over the shorts is the dirndl type.

STOLEN from the soldier's uniform are the epaulettes, the gilt buttons, the visored hats that are so prominent in Spring fashions. Cadet blue wool makes a smart suit with braided epaulettes and gilt buttons in double-breasted formation, plus pointed flap pockets.

We Know Fatigue But What is it?

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

WHAT IS FATIGUE? Whence comes it? Where is it located? What is its seat? While it is a general body feeling, from what structures of the body or from what derangements does it arise?

We know the answers to these questions only approximately. It may be part of an organic disease; it may be due to bad habits, or it may occur in people "who are just naturally tired." It is the commonest system which the physician encounters.

Analyzing the nature of fatigue, it may be any one or a combination of the following feelings: A mild tendency to yawn or spells of actual yawning. Disinclination to move the muscles. Feeling of drowsiness. Perspiration without adequate exercise. Wobbliness of the feet. Slouching in sitting or standing. Tendency to close the eyes from time to time. Difficulty in remembering just what has been said. Difficulty in relaxing. Unusual effort needed to start anything— to read, write or work. Impatience or easy irritation.

Causes of Fatigue

The causes of fatigue are:

(1)—Physical Exertion —This, of course, is natural fatigue and is healthy. When the muscles are used, there is an accumulation of lactic acid and it has been supposed that other "fatigue substances" are accumulated in the body; this, however, has not been proved. Prevention of exertion fatigue can be accomplished by rest pauses. Industry on a wide scale is adopting this method.

(2) Nutrition — A great many people are on an inadequate total food intake or on the verge of semi-starvation without knowing it. In these people fatigue occurs and creates a vicious circle. Lack of adequate food intake induces fatigue; fatigue destroys appetite. Therefore, there is a recurrence of lack of adequate food intake

(3) Inadequate Sleep — This results in frequent yawning during the day, difficulty in thinkng along one line for any length of time, dream-like ideas.

Factors in Environment

(4) Environment Factors — Light, noise, vibration and ventilation are the outstanding environmental factors as causes of fatigue. Insufficient light or glaring light are potent fatigue-breeders. Noise and vibration are the culprits in industry. One insurance company showed that when rooms used in clerical work were quieted, output increased by more than 10 per cent. Bad ventilation causes fatigue as much by the lack of movement of the air as by the temperature and humidity.

Psychological causes of fatigue are legion. Unsympathetic work, monotonous work, domestic unhappiness and many other causes operate.

The above may be called natural or functional causes of fatigue. Among organic causes of fatigue are anemia, focal infections, heart disease, tuberculosis and disturbance of the ductless glands.

HALLOWAY W.M.S.

The December meeting of the Halloway Women's Missionary Society was held at the home of Mrs. Herbert Townsend on Wednesday, Feb. 21st. Thirteen members and four visitors enjoyed a delicious dinner after which the meeting was presided over by Mrs. Earl Snider. The Roll Call response word was "Save".

In the business discussion, it was decided to canvass the community in aid of the War Service League. Those appointed to collect were,—Mrs. Harold Wilson and Mrs. Harry McMullen, Mrs. Earl Snider and Mrs. Coleman Townsend. Another committee consisting of Mrs. G.H. Rose and Miss Bessie Spencer was appointed to interview Mrs. Lazier of Belleville re supplies for the work. The first meeting will be held at Mrs. E. Snider's when supplies will be available for distribution.

It was also decided to present a pageant at a special Easter Service at the church. Mrs. Don Rose and Mrs. Ed. Emerson to be in charge.

Mrs. Earl Snider gave a reading on Prayer. A dramatization of the fourth chapter of Moving Millions entitled "In an Indian Dispensary" was ably presented by the following cast; Mrs. H. Townsend, Mrs. E. Snider, Mrs. E. Wilson, Mrs. D. Rose, Mrs. J. Townsend, Mrs. H. Wilson, Mrs. E. Emerson. Following the hymn, "The Great Physician" its application to India was read by Mrs. Snider who stated that in India there is only one doctor to every 12,000 people as compared to one for every 800 in Canada.

"How He Came" was a poem read by Mrs. Kenneth McMullen. Following the new practice for this year, the worship service was in charge of Mrs. Harry Townsend, who was assisted by Miss B. Spencer, Mrs. A. Wilson, Mrs. G. H. Rose and Mrs. Wm. Cadman.

"Contrasts in Central India" given by Miss B. McMullen gave a vivid picture of the problems our missionaries have to overcome there. Mrs. Harry Townsend led in prayer after which the offering amounting to $4.35 was dedicated by Mrs. Harold Wilson.

Picton, Belleville Juveniles Battle to Two-All Draw in First Game of the Playdowns

Belleville Ties Game Up in Last Second of Play After Scoring in First

PICTON GOALIE STARS

George Hart Peppered From All Angles but Clears in Sensational Style

Picton and Belleville juveniles battled to a two-all draw in the first game of the Ontario Juvenile Hockey Association initial round playdown at the Hume Arena last night. The clubs will enter the second game of the series, of which goals count on the round, at Picton on Wednesday night.

Al Kellar scored both goals for Belleville, notching the initial counter of the game early in the first period and scoring what proved the tying goal with but six seconds left to play in the last stanza, after Picton had rallied to knot the score and move into the lead as the result of some poor clearing on the part of the Belleville defence.

What both teams lacked in hockey knowledge they made up for in willingness and the youthful spirit of endeavour as the game bordered to shinny in the latter stages. On the night's play the Belleville kids deserved a better fate than a draw as the Dennis-led locals out-skated Picton and literally carried the play all evening, but inability to score, when in position cost the inexperienced Belleville kids several goals.

Picton Goalie Stars

The star of the game was undoubtedly George Hart, the Picton goalie, who made numerous miraculous saves and repeatedly turned back the avalanche of Belleville rubber that was continually fired at the Picton citadel. Hart bordered on the sensational and gave a sterling exhibition of goal-tending. He was given inadequate protection by his defence and only the strong back-checking of the Picton forwards mitigated the Belleville score behind Hart's superb goal-tending.

Although Belleville carried the play early and strongly into the Picton zone the only score in the first period came when Kellar whipped in Goyer's corner pass-out for the only score in the first two periods. Ross Row missed an open net for Belleville in the second frame, when his shot struck the Picton goal post, as Belleville rallied strongly in the middle session to swarm Hart, where they were continually thwarted.

Score While Shorthanded

Picton knotted the count late in the last stanza when Sergeant rifled in Ken Frederick's corner pass-out and from a difficult angle. With Bill McBride languishing in the penalty box as the result of a penalty Picton assumed the offensive and were rewarded for their efforts as Ross Row deflected the puck into the Belleville net in an effort to clear. Facing defeat Coach Dennis moved five forward for the last four minutes of the game and literally kept the puck within stick-reaching distance of Hart for the remainder of the game. The locals were rewarded with a last second goal when Kellar rifled in Robertson's forward pass to knot the count with but six seconds left to play.

With goalie Hart the outstanding player of the night, the Frederick boys, Sergeant, O'Neill and Whattam played strong hockey for Picton, while Dick Barrett led the locals as the only two-way player on the Belleville roster. Robertson, Kellar and Goyer carried the front line mail with Row and McBride bouncing the opposition off the defence occasionally.

The shots on net by periods were:

Picton	5	4	7—16
Belleville	10	11	11—32

The line-ups:

Belleville—Goal, Clark, defence, McBride, Row; centre, Robertson; wings; May, Barrett; subs, Goyer, Fitzgibbon, McGuire, Kellar, Cronk Rosebush and Cook sub goal.

TRAINING CAMP BRIEFS

(By the Associated Press)

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 27—(AP) — Lefty Lee Grissom, the pitcher New York Yankees took from their 1939 World Series rivals, Cincinnati Reds, looks for a good season because his arm isn't sore.

"I pulled a muscle in my left shoulder in 1937 pitching in seven games in six days," he explained. "I pitched only one complete game all year."

He gave his wing its first trial since last season when the Yanks' camp opened yesterday and didn't feel a twinge.

Avalon, Calif. — Chicago's Cubs are jubilant over the fact that Clay Bryant's arm hasn't given any indication of soreness after extended throwing drills. His work and the showing of Julio Bonetti, have been the highlights of early workouts. Bonetti has a good fast ball and curve and is working to develop deception in his delivery.

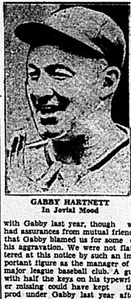
Clearwater, Fla.—It didn't take Manager Leo Durocher of Brooklyn long to make up his mind about Joe Vosmik, the former American League outfielder. He stood behind the cage at batting practice yesterday and saw Joe belt a couple to the far corners of the field and announced, "Vosmik is my left fielder." He has 10 candidates for the other two regular gardening jobs.

Tampa, Fla.—Cincinnati's Reds may realize they had to take it and like it last fall in the world series, but they're determined to go places this year. Ernie Lombardi, all smiles after signing his new contract, declared: "I'm going to regain the batting championship." And when a photographer asked Johnny Vandermeer what minor league club he was with last year, Johnny replied: "The Reds, my friend."

Mr. Hartnett Won't Defend Drizzlepuss Title, It Is Said

By EDWARD BURNS

Central Press Canadian Writer



GABBY HARTNETT
In Jovial Mood

There are symptoms that Gabby Hartnett, manager of the Cubs, will default in the 1940 defence of the Drizzlepuss cup, the trophy he won going away in the 1939 competition. It will be remembered that Bill Terry was an early challenger for the Drizzlepuss award, but, under the hot pace set by Gabby, fell by the wayside, so thoroughly vanquished that he had a silly grin on his face when he surrendered.

Gabby has indicated that he is going to be a jovial fellow next year. He's going back, it seems, to the character for which he was well and favorably known for many years prior to 1939. Of course Gabby may have his glum days. All managers have those and they'd be odd and inefrective managers if they didn't do some big league growling on occasion. But the word is out that Gabby is not going to wear a vinegar face continuously in 1940 as he did from last mid-May until his contract was renewed in the closing days of December, 1939.

Thaws Out Slightly

Gabby began to show a slight thawing out early in December when he found the press, against which he had been bitter at the close of the season, made no unfriendly comment about P. K. Wrigley's announcement that Gabby would be given another chance as Cub skipper, at least at the start of the 1940 season. Even so, Gabby mentioned rather frosty throughout the holidays, not even popping with written in Christmas cards.

It was at the dinner and fun carnival given by the Chicago chapter of the Baseball Writers' association of America on an. 9 that Gabby loosened up and really indicated that he intends to go back to his old ways with the newspaper clan.

Hopes It Works Out

We hope things go along so it works out that way. We wouldn't expect Gabby to sacrifice his managerial dignity by trying to get along with some journalistic heel who didn't deserve consideration. There may be a few heels in the baseball writing business, we wouldn't know about that. But we do know that last year Gabby apparently got himself worked up to thinking all baseball writers are heels. And he probably could support his claims with sweeping evidence. But he must have found his quarrel with the press got him little satisfaction, no happiness, and a lot of aggravation as a result of extra heckling his attitude inspired.

We are among the scrivening gents who never had a quarrel with Gabby last year, though we had assurances from mutual friends that Gabby blamed us for some of his aggravation. We were not flattered at this notice by such an important figure as the manager of a major league baseball club. A guy with half the keys on his typewriter missing could have kept the prod under Gabby last year after he once got sore and began his war on the press.

Gets Persecution Complex

It would have meant little to the Cub public if Gabby's quarrel with the newspaper boys had been confined to Gabby and the newspaper boys. Editors sometimes have to remind reporters that the public hasn't any interest in the personal affairs of reporters. In this case the reporters never held out any news of Cub accomplishment. Few presumed to present any of the background of Gabby's exceedingly "poor press."

That which might have been a nice little private feud got out of hand when Gabby developed not only a perpetual grouch but a persecution complex. One thing led to another and instead of having a playful little newspaper jam on his hands, Gabby found his whole sphere in an uproar.

Purely through his reputation prior to 1939, we believe, Gabby got another shot at managing the Cubs. Friends of the big guy rejoice in just the promise that he's going to be the pre-1939 Hartnett.

Hope it isn't a false alarm. We have a date with the guy between Chicago and Los Angeles Feb. 19-22. If we get the cards we'll find out whether or not Charles Leo Hartnett really has abandoned his grouch.

Red Horner Enjoys Booing as Well As the Cheering

By JACK CALDER

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Feb. 27—(CP)— Some people in hockey figure Red Horner is near the end of the trail, a few hope so and the big redhead won't commit himself.

"When they stop cheering in Toronto and when they stop booing in Boston, I'll know I've lost the old touch," he says. Then I'll quit."

But Toronto Maple Leafs' bone-crushing captain and defenceman still packs them in with the tactics that made him a violent upstart when he broke into the National Hockey League in 1928 at the age of 19. The big hip still swings into his bodychecks and the big right fist still flashes when somebody tries to comb him.

"Sure, I get a thrill out of the booing as well as the cheering," he admits. "I guess I have a particular part to play in hockey and I think some people come to see me play it. I sort of tingle when that Boston crowd gives me a going-over."

Leads in Penalties

Horner is leading the league in penalties for the eighth straight year.

Weekend before last, the Leafs and Montreal Canadiens staged the two most riotous games of the season, replete with squabbles, fights and penalties. Horner was in the midst of everything, bringing the customers to their feet with applause at Toronto and with hoots at Montreal. The Toronto team, fighting mad under the Horner urge, won both games.

The next night in Boston he laughed when that other Leaf veteran, Gus Marker, exclaimed over a broiled lobster: "A fellow shouldn't play too long after he's 30."

"That all depends on who he is," Horner said, with a wink to others at the table. "Some men get old and retire to politics or something, while others just go on and on."

Crowd Always Rides Him

Tuesday night the Leafs met Boston's good, big team. Horner was caught up the ice, when the Bruins scored their first goal and coach Dick Irvin gave him orders to remain on the defence after that. The crowd couldn't understand why Red kept hammering the Boston attackers at his blueline, and then refused to carry the puck to the Bruin end, where he would get the business in return.

"Yellow Horner, yellow Horner," they screamed when he went to the bench. They forgot that Horner once smashed Eddie Shore to the ice in Boston with a broken jaw after Shore had put Toronto's Ace Bailey out of the game for life.

The Bruins won that one 5-0 and Horner ventured: "Maybe Marker is right." But Toronto won in Detroit Thursday night and the redhead fairly glowed afterward. He didn't talk about retiring.

RUGBY MENTORS LOOK UNKINDLY ON HUDDLE RULE

Teams in Future Will be Allowed Only Three Huddles a Period

CHANCE FOR ERROR

Ted Reeve Agrees With New Rule Stating Too Much Time Lost in Huddles

Toronto Feb. 27 (CP)—Canada's football coaches appear to be banding together to chastise the judgment of the men who formulate the game's rules. The tutors look unkindly upon the rule adopted by the Canadian Rugby Union last Saturday allowing only three field huddles during one quarter.

Ross Trimble, coach of the great Ottawa Rough Riders team which bowed to Winnipeg Blue Bombers in the Dominion final, last night said he thought it was "too bad some of our rulemakers don't talk to coaches occasionally when rule changes are being considered."

"As it is, players and coaches are left at the mercy of well-meaning old-timers who forget that playing conditions have changed in the last 20 years," said Trimble. Speaking from his Toronto home, the Ottawa coach said he was in favor of the continuation of the huddle system.

Standing alone in favor of the switch back to barking signals from scrimmage, Ted Reeve, coach of Montreal Royals, said he thought the move would speed up the game. He contended there has been too much abuse of the 20-second limit allowed for huddles.

More Room For Error Says Kerr

Coach Doug Kerr of McGill University commented in Montreal that advantages of the huddle system outweigh the disadvantages "by a long way." He doesn't think cutting down the number of huddles will speed up the game "an awful lot" and there will be more room for error under the new ruling.

The restricted huddle rule is "a poor one" as far as Lew Hayman, coach of Toronto Argonauts, is concerned. Warren Stevens, University of Toronto coach, said that an effort was made to do away with the huddle in city senior games two years ago but the idea was abandoned "because the crowd outroared the signal callers."

Another coach to recall experiments to discard the huddle as "unsatisfactory," Art Massucci of the Sarnia Imperials, said his quarterbacks always have called regular signals "but we found they have to be called from huddle so the boys can hear what's going on."

Only western coach to comment on the C.R.U. meeting, Dr. W. C. Broadfoot of the University of Alberta paid no special comment on the huddle rule, but said at Edmonton that the Western Intercollegiate Union probably will play Western Interprovincial rules next fall regardless of changes adopted by the C.R.U.

Best figures we can get indicate the Monetta, S. C., girl's basketball team won 154 consecutive games before dropping last season's finale. One of these days a basketball team is going to catch up with the Franconia, Vt., Red Devils.... they beat Haverhill, 111-43 last week, but slipped the next night and won from Ashland by only 111-44.........not so the Rochester, N. GOODIES BEATEN BY PT. COLBORNE BUT SAINTS WIN

SAINTS TWO UP

Squeeze Out 3-2 Win Over Hamilton Right in the Ambitious City

By the Canadian Press

Toronto Goodyears are listed as the first victims of playoff upsets in the Ontario Hockey Association Senior "A" series. Defending champions and leaders at the close of the current schedule Toronto failed to hold a 4-1 lead at Port Colborne last night and were trounced 6-4 in the second of the best-of-five semi-finals. Toronto won the first game at home 3-0.

St. Catharines squeezed out a 3-2 victory over Hamilton in the other semi-final at Hamilton. Saints won the first of this best-of-five series 5-4.

King, Turney and O'Flaherty gave Toronto a 3-0 lead in the first 13 minutes against Port Colborne. Thompson broke the Sailors zero at the three-quarter mark but King pounded home his second marker to make the Ports look a beaten team.

Toronto adopted defensive tactics during the second session which proved their undoing. The Sailors began to click in this style of going and goals by Gallinger and Fitzgerald put them back in the running.

The champions were completely outplayed in the last period which saw Gallinger score twice and Upper once to give the Ports the game and square the series.

Brunell scored an early goal for Hamilton. The slim lead held until early in the third frame when Boyd drifted a screened shot into the Hamilton net.

Backor and Mocha added to the Saints' total before Barlow slashed Hamilton's second counter past Ran Forder, who played a standout game in the winning team's cage.

Third games will be played at Toronto and St. Catharines tomorrow night.

Al Murray

When the talk turns to plain and fancy stitching, so much a part of the national pastime, the name of Al Murray always crops up. No official count is kept of the amount of thread used up by players during their careers but the championship in such an item would probably rest somewhere between Al and Helge Bostrum, rotund Chicago defenceman of a few years ago, still plying his wares in the minors. Pound for pound (he weighs around 150) the American rearguard is one of the hardest hitting players in the N.H.L.—or was in his best days. A shoulder injury that kept him on the sidelines for all but a few games last season, has never completely healed and Al is not the mighty mite he used to be. No trivial injury was his shoulder one that required the transplanting of tissue from leg muscle to pull it together. Born at Stratford, Ont., 31 years ago, Murray spent five years acquiring experience in the minors with Buffalo and Syracuse, before joining the Amerks in 1933-34, making this his seventh season with the team. He's not the rushing type and the goal he scored last Jan. 7 was his first in four years. His totals at the end of last season stood at four goals, five assists for nine points plus 155 minutes sitting-out in penalty pews.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with
Ken J. Colling

Four clubs, Peterboro, Kitchener, Port Colborne and either Owen Sound or Collingwood will engage in a round robin series for the intermediate "A" championship of the O.H.A. The Petes have been idle, with the exception of an exhibition game, since they eliminated the Flyers, but meet Port Colborne in the first game of the round robin series tonight, with Kitchener coming to Peterboro Friday. Incidentally Red Creighton, former Peterboro forward is with Owen Sound so if the "Sounders" win over Collingwood a real reception can be expected by Creighton when he appears at the Brock St. ice igloo.

Early in December the Petes engaged the Oshawa Generals in an exhibition game and of course lost. At the time we suggested to the Liftlock City scribe the fact that his pets couldn't beat the Generals if they played from then until Max Swanston revives the Central Ontario Baseball League (and we don't expect to see that miracle this decade.) At any rate the Peterboro scribe predicted at that time the Petes "would beat the Generals after a month's practice." Well, Frank Buckland's group titlists had seven weeks in the O.H.A. and last week played the Generals a third exhibition game this season. The result was even worse than on previous occasions, the Generals humbled the Petes 11 to 3 to humiliate the Liftlock City guys with a third successive defeat at the hands of a junior team. Friend George Campbell, Oshawa's demond sports scribe, recalled the fact that Mr. Perdue openly boasted of the Petes' prowess some weeks ago, but the Liftlock City scribe's prognostications were as bad as the Petes efforts against the General juniors.

Do you remember when Kimberley Dynamiters were crowned amateur hockey champions of the world when they won a 2-1 overtime victory over a Swiss team at London four years ago today? England, Olympic titleholder and previously beaten 3-0 by the Dynamiters, clinched second place with a 5-0 defeat of Germany.

Vic Probst, former All-American basketball star, now playing with the Bethlehem Steel team, shot a basket for the opposition in a game this winter. But it wasn't a "Riegels," he explained. He was cornered and attempted to pass to a teammate. The ball slipped and hit the basket.

It may not have been of senior hockey calibre, but the Picton and Belleville juvenile kids at least showed willingness to give their all in an effort to win, as the teams played to a two-all tie last night in the O.J.H.A. playdowns here. Had the locals been able to score, when the opportunity presented itself, they'd have had the proverbial bag full of goals. However, between the sterling goal-tending of George Hart, the Picton net custodian, and the inability of the locals to hit anything except Hart's pads, the Dennis-led locals now are faced with the problem of beating Picton right in the Prince Edward County seat tomorrow night. In the two Fredericks and Sergeant the Picton juveniles boast of a trio of smart young pucksters who bear watching at all times, while Hart is as good a minor league goal-keeper as has graced the local rink in years. However, Coach Bill Dennis' squad should beat the Picton kids simply because they can out-skate them. On the smaller Picton rink, stick-handlers like Kellar, Goyer, Barrett, McBride and Robertson should show up at a better advantage and we look for a Belleville win tomorrow.

Johnny Sturm is the man who hopes to beat out Babe Dahlgren for the job of guarding first base for the New York Yankees.

He is the only candidate and incidentally the only minor leaguer who figures to have even a slight chance of breaking into the Yankee lineup this year. Of course, there may be a young pitcher or two catching on, but the Yankee catching department, the infield and the outfield appears set.

However, Sturm will have his chance.

Sturm has worked his way up through the minors by gradual stages. He started in the Missouri-Illinois Trolley league. He played later in Joplin, in Augusta, in Binghampton, in Louisville and last year in Kansas City.

President Frank Calder announced today that the board of governors of the National Hockey League would meet in New York tomorrow "to arrange as much as is possible of the final details of the Stanley Cup play-offs." The Stanley Cup play-offs, won last year by the Boston Bruins, are due to start March 19th, two days after the close of the regular N. H.L. schedule.

SPORT SPICE — Interscholastic hockey is the next sport on the local horizon, Norwood High meeting Albert College here on Thursday evening with the return game in Norwood next Saturday.....If the local juveniles have as big a percentage of the play tomorrow in Picton, as they commanded here last night, they should win, but Picton will be a stubborn outfit to down. George Laughlin's B.C.I. hoopsters won two games from Napanee yesterday, the seniors winning 28 to 21 and the juniors 30 to 13.... After waltzing through their group without a loss, the Gananoque intermediates bowed out to the Whitby Red Wings last night, although Gan. played the Oshawa suburb to a 5-5 draw in Whitby. ...In case the local juniors don't know it — Kingston beat Brockville 6-0 in their first meeting last night, (Oh, whata headache) ...The annual meeting of the O.A.S.A. will be held in Toronto on March 22. Harry Knott please note.

Archibald Beaten In Over-Weight Bout

New Orleans, Feb. 27—(AP) — Jimmy Perrin, current fistic pride of New Orleans, won a 10-round decision last night over Joey Archibald, world's featherweight champion from Pawtucket, R. I., but the fight was overweight and the title was not involved.

Perrin weighed 127 1-4 pounds and Archibald 126 1-4. A total of 5,571 fans paid $6,182 to see the scrap.

Pete Baird boxing expert of the Times-Picayune, put the result down "as a home town decision—but a very popular one," he said he thought Archibald had a shade the better of the argument.

The champion obviously was tired in the last couple of rounds. When he was going in his early rounds he didn't seem to be exerting himself. He showed class, skill, and a fast left hand.

BELLEVILLE C. I. HOOPSTERS WIN FROM NAPANEE

Local Juniors Win 30 to 13, While Collegiate Seniors Win 28 to 21

EXHIBITION GAMES

Taking both ends of a twin bill of basketball played on their gymnasium floor, the Belleville Collegiate hoopsters downed the Napanee Collegiate in junior and senior exhibition basketball here yesterday. The B.C.I. juniors won by a wide margin of 30 to 13, but the Laughlin-led seniors were forced to come from behind to win 28 to 21.

In the senior tilt the Napanee cagers were out in front 16 to 8 at the halfway mark, but the local "tri-color" rallied to outscore the visitors 20 to 5 in the last session and win 28 to 21. Max Vechter paced the home quintette with 12 points, while Chapman led the visitors scoring threat.

The lineups:

Belleville Collegiate: Wannamaker, Pigden 2, Vechter 12, Griffin 2, Thorne 5, McBried 2, Reddick, Warren, W. McBride 4, Hunter and Gardner.

Napanee C.I.: Moore 7 McCrachen 4, Sills, Clark, Chapman 8, Beaubien 2 and Wright.

Leading from the barrier to the wire, the B.C.I. juniors forged to an 11 to 8 halfway advantage over the Napanee kids and added to their prowess in the last session with 19 points, as Napanee scored but one basket. The local juniors completely overshadowed the Napanee kids in the dying moments, although the visitors held well throughout the initial half. The final score was 30 to 13 for B.C.I.

Parliament and Gannon led the Belleville quintette on the attack, while Watts and Henderson paced the losers.

The lineups:

N.C.I.: Winter 3, Watts 4, D. Sexsmith 2, Henderson 4, Clarke, M. Smith, R. Sexsmith and R. Smith.

Belleville (Jrs.): Kerr, Cunningham 4, Parliament 11, Gannon 8, Mott 2, Scott 2, Theobald, Tomaso 4 and Pomeroy.

HOW TO OVERCOME ITCHING PILES

If you are annoyed with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not neglect the same or run the risk of an operation. Any itching, soreness or painful passage of stool,—is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once. For this purpose get from J. S. McKeown or any druggist, a package of Hemroid and use as directed. This formula, which is used internally, quickly relieves the itching and soreness and aids in healing the sore, tender spots. Hemroid is highly recommended, is easy to use and it seems the height of folly for anyone to risk an operation when a simple remedy, which is so pleasant to use may be had at such a reason-

The Stars Say

For Wednesday, February 28

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

THE PLANETARY configurations ruling this day emphasize personal rather than business activities. It is probable that social, domestic or romantic engagements, or those business interests connected therewith, may be uppermost, possibly causing some sort of surprising and dramatic upheaval. If this sudden visitation is diplomatically handled, with strategy or cleverness, there may be much pleasure and gratification. The mind is well poised to grapple with intriguing situations, however thrilling or novel.

Those whose birthday it is are on the eve of a year in which their tact, shrewdness and mental stability will enable them to meet an unforeseen and exciting trend of events, in which social, emotional or romantic angles are stressed. This dramatic or intriguing situation may demand a sudden disruption of current affairs, which, if shrewdly handled, may culminate in great satisfaction and solid benefits as well. Use tact and compromise rather than force.

A child born on this day may have a stable and dependable mentality, although leaning toward the mysterious, subtle, intriguing and enigmatic. It may have strong intuitions, perhaps being interested in the occult or unusual.

Bloomfield Rink Scene of Carnival

Picton, Feb. 27—Bloomfield rink presented a colorful scene when the Bloomfield rink committee staged a successful skating carnival. A full moon favored the event which proved a merry one for young and old.

Mr. Simmons, C.N.R. Agent, made a splendid master of ceremonies and judges of [illegible] and costumes were Mrs. J. Gough, Ed Baxter and Roy Hicks. There was keen competition for the fine prizes, which were awarded as follows: Oldest skater, Thos. Cooper; Youngest skater, Marvin Stacey; Best comic over 16, Sylvia Stark; Best comic under 16, Betty Moore; Best dressed couple, Ival Stark and Mrs. H. Mann; Best skating couple, Rita Hicks and Nellie East; Lucky door prize, Jas. Gough.

In a relay race for public school teams, Cooper's School (Don East, teacher), composed of D. Gannon, Roy Walker and Bob Boyce, were winners.

A tug-of-war on ice and skates proved amusing with Jas. Gough's team winners.

In a boy tow girl race, Douglas Arkett and Nellie East carried off the prize and Floyd Walker won a race for boys.

Music was supplied by Gordon Nourse with a public address system which added much to the affair.

Prizes for the event, much appreciated, were donated by Rev. J. T. E. Blanchard, Baxter Canning Co., R. B. Otto, Taylor's bakery, East's Garage, H. Cleave, Robt. McCoy, Arthur Moore, Frank Stone, Holmes Matthie, H. R. MacDonald, Don Thompson.

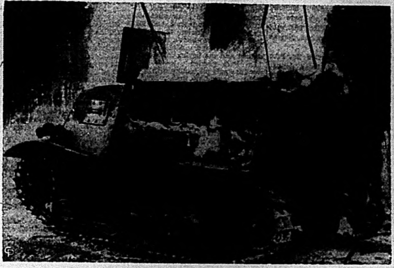
RED TANK CREWS PERISH IN FLAMING INFERNO



This blazing Russian tank is just one of the scores that met a flaming end in the fighting near the Summa sector of the Mannerheim line. The Finns discovered that dynamite and gasoline are very effective in stopping these Red juggernauts. Crews are usually burned to death before they can escape from the trapped tanks.

CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS FIGHTING IN FINLAND

Less than a week after they arrived from England two Avro Anson reconnaissance training bombers were assembled at the De Havilland Aircraft Company's plant near Toronto and put through their test flights. These are just the advance guard of more than 1,600 Anson bombers which will be used in connection with the Commonwealth Air Training Scheme. Two views of the big bombers are shown here as they were put through their paces by Test Pilot G. R. Spradbrow.

The Spirit of the Times

By J. B. M. CLARK

Dr. Pike has been on the point of proposing to Martha Summers on several occasions, but something had always made his pause.

Martha attracted him tremendously with her pretty eyes and bright ways. Her people were well fixed, too, and Martha was the only child. But that was just the stumbling block—her people.

Mr. Summers had been a carpenter and had grown rich quickly in one of the Los Angeles building booms. He and his wife were excellent people, Dr. Pike felt, and had been very kind to him. But as possible "inlaws."...

The thing had worried Dr. Pike and held him back, for a dentist with a fashionable clientele simply had to be particular.

Then came the Scott stockbroking scandal and Mr. Summers' fortune disappeared overnight.

Dr. Pike met Ruth Swinnerton on the way home from church and turned to walk with her.

"What do you think?" said Ruth vivaciously. "Poor Mr. Summers has lost everything in the Scott smash—at least it is thought he has. I can't suppose anyone will know till after the meeting of the creditors next week, or until the books are cleaned up. Martha's gone and taken a position in the Boulevard Lunch Counter—serving pie and things. Isn't it a shame?"

"Boulevard Lunch Counter!—pie and things!" said Dr. Pike aghast. "Good heavens!"

Martha seemed further away from him than ever.

"Yes," said Ruth nodding briskly. "I must drive down there and take lunch one of these days just to cheer the poor dear up. You know where it is—down near Exposition park? You might go, too. It becomes a duty, you know. I believe they're going to sell their beautiful home and move to their old neighborhood out east."

At the first opportunity Dr. Pike motored over to the Boulevard Lunch Counter, where Martha received him with a blush and a smile of gratitude that somehow suggested tears. She looked prettier than ever in her white apron, Dr. Pike thought.

A tall, dark-haired, white-clad male attendant who had observed Martha's blush and smile, scowled disapproval.

Martha and the doctor exchanged a few embarrassed commonplaces while she served him with soup, and pie, and other things which he ordered haphazard. "It's too bad you couldn't have found something a little more congenial," said Dr. Pike sympathically. "Some of your friends might have offered something. I'll try some of my business clients if you like—to get you a job in the bookkeeping line perhaps."

"No, thank you," said Martha, flushing again. "I got this position for myself, and it just about suits me. It's my own fault—never learned anything useful you know. I just ran about enjoying myself and trying to be a society girl. Father was too easy with me, poor darling. But I do know something about cooking, and food, and Mr. Blake (the proprietor, that tall, dark fellow over there) is perhaps going to give me charge of the kitchen and the buying later on."

Dr. Pike nodded thoughtfully over his apple pie, noting with some slight misgiving that Martha seemed rather proud of what she had done.

"I suppose you'll learn stenography as soon as possible?" he hazarded, "and get away from here as quickly as you can?"

"Oh, I don't know," said Martha with a sparkle in her eye. "Why should I? This work is quite honest, and I seem to be fitted for it. But I might consider learning stenography," she added hastily, noting the disappointment in his face. She had been fond of him in the halcyon days, and thought it beautiful that he should come seeking her in her time of trouble.

Dr. Pike drove round to the Boulevard Lunch Counter at regular intervals during the next few weeks, and ate many things that did not agree with him.

Martha usually took a short walk about one o'clock and he got into the habit of taking her for drives instead.

The unlooked for development of character in what had hitherto been a light and careless girl charmed and fascinated him. To propose marriage seemed the obvious course. But he was obsessed with the notion that he might now have to include Mr. and Mrs. Summers in the bargain—bring them into his home, and the prospect unnerved him.

He had heard it rumored that Mr. Summers was going back to carpentering, and the vision of that worthy man in his shirt sleeves with a tucked-up apron loaded with hammers and saws going in and out of his select chambers made Dr. Pike shudder.

Again he hesitated.

But Martha's charms proved to be more than he could withstand, and not long afterwards, on one of their little midday outings, he offered her his heart and hand.

They had run out clear of the city on one of the main highways to the coast and turned off into a quiet ranch road that ran betweeen groves of orange trees decked in glorious blossom.

The air was full of sweet perfume, and the sun shone warmly.

Martha looked simply enchanting. However, she proved to be coy. "I appreciate the honor awfully, Dr. Pike," she said demurely. "But now that things are the way they are—it's difficult. Poor father's in an awful tangle, and I must help him out by earning something to repay him for all his kindness."

She was hoping against hope that Dr. Pike would say something about assisting her father, and was deeply disappointed that he didn't. Not that they would have accepted his help anyway—it wasn't up to him. But still she was disappointed.

"Would you come and take me away out of the lunch counter?" she asked suddenly.

"Take you away!" said Dr. Pike, startled. All his life he had hated scenes. "Surely you can go away quietly? There doesn't seem any need for heroics."

"But there is," she persisted. "I have a reason."

The subdued smile on her face made Dr. Pike suspect she was joking, and he promised to call for her the next day.

It struck him as strange on entering the Boulevard Lunch Counter the following noon to find the place deserted.

"The kitchen staff's on holiday," the tall dark man explained, eyeing Dr. Pike coldly.

"There's nothing but cold stuff."

Dr. Pike took a ham sandwich.

Martha was not in sight, but presently she appeared, apparently a the result of some kind of signal from the tall man. She was not in uniform, but looked very genteel in a pink blouse and dark skirt. Then Mr. Summers came into view, smiling, and in his carpenter's apron.

"Gentlemen," he said, taking Martha by the hand and leading her forward. "Who claims this girl?"

"I do," said two voices simultaneously—the voices of Dr. Pike and the tall man.

"And who will take me thrown in with her?" continued Mr. Summers, still smiling.

"I will," said one voice alone.

It was not the voice of Dr. Pike.

"Going—going—gone!" said Mr. Summers, and before the astonished dentist quite knew what was happening the tall man had taken the counter at a flying leap and enfolded Martha in his arms.

"You see, doctor," said Mr. Summers kindly, "while you hesitated another fellow came forward and offered everything he had. But as it happens I won't need to be a burden on anyone—I've just got word that my funds were not all lost in the smash-up. I am going to put money into this business—we will run it as a family affair—enlarge, and so on. I'm not blaming you, you understand, but I believe if you had just been a little quicker you could have . . ."

"Oh, nonsense, father, he couldn't," broke in Martha from the tall man's side.

But Dr. Pike was sport enough to know he had lost out. And he was also sport enough to be best man at the wedding.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was looking at her mail at breakfist, saying, Well well, Sarah Tidden's long expected grandchild has at last put its delayed appearance, Sophie Deetz mentions it here in a P.S.

I dont know why I never get any newsy letters from men, all I get is bills and announcements of opportunities to contract other bills, it's a womens world, pop said.

Being what he always claims, and I had a idea and this afternoon I wrote him a letter giving him different news about the fellows, and I addressed the envelope and pasted a cancelled stamp on it to save 2 cents and put it at pop's place as if it came in the afternoon mail, and pop opened it when we sat down for supper saying, By gollies there must be a Santa Claws after all, I've got a chatty letter from one of the boys.

Really, how intristing, what's it all about? ma said, and pop said, I'll read it to you.

Wich he started to, saying Deer Mr. Potts, and ma said, Well, that's rather a formal beginning, isn't it?

Well yes, but you see I haven't seen this chap for some hours, I mean for some time, pop said. Deer Mr. Potts, my attention has been called that you dont get much information with your mail, so I thought you might like to know a few new things about some of the fellows. For instants Puds Simkins has a thing on the back of his neck that he wants to claim is a boil, but it's only a exter size pimple and nothing to be proud of, and for instants Lucky Leroy Shooster had a stummick ake during the spelling lessen and was aloud to go home with it, and for instants Glasses Magee took off his glasses to wressle Skinny Martin and put them on Sid Hunt's front steps and Sam Cross sat on them but they didn't get broke, just badly sprained. Your loving son Benny Potts.

Being the end, and pop put it in his pocket to show down at his office, proving he was glad to get it.

Toronto Resident Owes His Life to Unknown Person

Toronto, Feb. 27—(CP)—Nazar Thomas said Monday that he owed his life to an unknown person who smashed the front door of his store early yesterday and awakened him. Fire destroyed the interior of the store.

"I would probably have been burned alive if he hadn't shouted to me," Thomas said. "I would like to know who it was."

Thomas said he singed his hair in an attempt to break through the flames and reach the front door and then tried to squeeze through the iron bars on a rear window He got stuck halfway and felt the fire burning his legs before he got free.

He ran into a washroom, smashed a window and clambered through, falling into a bank of snow. Following treatment for burns at hospital, he was released.

NEW YORK STOCKS

New York, Feb. 27 (AP)—The stock market scales tilted toward the upside today as industrial shares attracted more buying.

Rubbers, aircrafts, steels, rails and electric equipment groups generally moved ahead fractions to more than a point, then settled back into a slow drift. Small advances predominated in the mixed price lists near the fourth hour.

A little higher most of the time were Bethlehem, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, Douglas, United Aircraft, Pan American Airways, Goodyear, and Sears Roebuck.

Dome Mines, in the Canadian list, advanced a major fraction while Canadian Pacific and Lake Shore Mines held steady. McIntyre rested stationary. Canada 4's, in the bond market, were neglected.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 27 —(CP)— On Toronto Exchange the price tone was again heavy today, particularly the quotations on the golds. The gold share index showed a drop of a half point at noon, while the base metal and the industrial shares eased narrowly and the western oils held steady. Trading was quiet and only 131,000 shares changed hands in the first three hours.

C. P. R. featured the action, trading in heavy blocks at a gain of 3-8 to 6 7-8. National Steel Car was up a point to 63 and the utilities and foods were irregularly higher. Implement stocks weakened.

Recessions in the golds were posted mainly by the secondary issues, including San Antonio, Aunor, Coniaurum and Powell Rouyn.

FIVE NEW BATTLESHIPS

heavy cruisers would come out into the Atlantic Ocean and, without fear of being brought to account, would be able to obstruct, if not arrest, the whole of the enormous trade without which we could not live.

"Happily we have far greater strength in capital ships than the enemy and if at any time they break out, as they may do, we always are ready to meet them with much larger forces and bring them to battle and destroy them."

Comparison of Shipping Losses

Mr. Churchill placed the net loss of British merchant shipping at less than 200,000 tons out of a 21,000,000 total. He compared the figure with that of 460,000 tons lost in "single deadly month of April, 1917."

Each month has shown a steady improvement in shipping, he said, with the navy convoying into British harbors in January—"in the teeth of U-boats, mines and winter gales and fogs"—considerably more than four fifths the peace time average of the three preceding years.

The opposition was quick to praise the administration of the Admiralty. A. V. Alexander, Labor, a former First Lord, said "the spirit of our people is behind the Royal Navy."

Mr. Churchill's statement accompanied the introduction of the navy appropriation bill.

Two U-Boats Believed Lost

He also announced that two German submarines almost certainly had been sunk within the last two days and predicted an increase in U-boat building.

By the end of 1939 the Germans had lost at least half their U-boats, namely 35, Mr. Churchill said, and he doubted whether even 10 fresh U-boats went into action during the first four months of the war.

"With the passage of summer the new building of U-boats will increasingly come into play and we expect to meet these with our very large new buildings of crafts especially adapted to their destruction," Mr. Churchill said.

Mastery Over Magnetic Mine Seen

He told the House that "we see our way to mastering," the magnetic mine "although mechanically it is very nicely made."

The First Lord asked the House for "a few men, some ships and a little money"—the Admiralty's appropriation is kept secret under wartime regulations. The House is being asked to pass a $100 pound ($445) token appropriation, and will not know until after the war just how much money it really represents.

Mr. Churchill said it was physically impossible to make exact estimates, and "there is no need to tell the enemy more than is good for him."

Speaking of the magnetic mine Mr. Churchill said: "To be modest we do not feel at all outdone in science by the Nazis. Although we must expect, perhaps in the immediate future, further and much heavier attacks by mines, we believe we shall find ourselves equipped to deal with them."

Minesweepers

He said the engagement of thousands of volunteer minesweepers originally was for three months.

"But it is now clear that it must be greatly prolonged," Mr. Churchill added. "The volunteers from the fishing fleets seem to have taken a liking to it. In many ports over 75 per cent of those who volunteered for three months now wish to continue for the duration.

"In their attack by mines upon our shipping and neutral shipping, the Germans have broken every rule hitherto accepted by the world for regulating mining warfare.

German Atrocities

"One of the most extraordinary things I have ever known in my experience is the way in which the German illegalities, atrocities and brutalities are coming to be accepted as if they were part of the ordinary day-to-day conditions of war."

Toronto Butter Prices Improve

Toronto, Feb. 27 — Butter prices improved slightly under light offerings as graded eggs eased on a quieter market at Toronto yesterday.

Fair demand appeared on the butter market in morning dealings only to slow down later. Current supplies continued to arrive in light volume and these were kept moving. First-grade Ontario creamery solids sold at 26c per pound, compared with Saturday's range of 25 3-4c to 26c.

Receipts were ample for requirements on the quieter egg market with inquiry not so brisk. Graded eggs were reduced 1-2c per dozen on all grades, but the retail section remained at previous levels.

LARGE NUMBER OF GERMAN PLANES

No Alarm Sounded

No alarm was sounded at that time. Officials said it was unnecessary. But sirens sounded just before dawn at the approach of the larger German force.

It was a spring-like evening in Paris when the first two planes appeared, and numerous Parisians calmly sipped their wine at sidewalk cafes, or hung out apartment windows, or stood on the sidewalks to watch the play of the searchlights against the starlit night.

The cannonading was heard first to the east, then it spread in volume around the city. Radio stations shut down lest their broadcasts guide the attackers. The last previous Paris air raid alarm came Nov. 23.

Citizens Warned to Take Shelters

Today, authorities took note of Parisians' behavior and issued a notice reminding civilians to take shelter upon hearing anti-aircraft guns. Even if no bombs fall, there is danger from falling shells or shell fragments from anti-aircraft batteries.

The night brought a change in the weather, with low-lying clouds and a drizzling rain. No planes were heard directly over the city, nor was any firing noted during the period of alarm.

Whether the show of German force was simply a reply to recent British flights deep into Germany, or meant the start of more serious activity, remained to be seen.

The Germans also were reported in flight deep over eastern, northern and northwestern France, with squadrons crossing the frontier and fanning out in various directions.

In contrast to the stir in the air, the western front was reported quiet. This morning's communique said: "A quiet night on the whole front."

BRITISH PLANES FLY OVER BERLIN

ed sky. The planes were driven off. No alarm was sounded, although the firing lasted 15 minutes.

The cannonading first was heard east of Paris, then grew in volume as the planes, flying high, approached the city.

Observers expressed belief the sudden shift to spring-like weather had brought on the surge of aerial activity.

The aerial uneasiness extended to the Netherlands. Anti-aircraft batteries at Amersfoort and surrounding villages opened fire during the night. Residents reported that planes, believed of foreign nationality, had passed over at high altitude.

Residents along the Luxembourg frontier with Germany reported big Nazi troop movements. Trains and long columns of trucks, infantry and cavalry were seen. Luxembourg is on the northwest end of the western front.

Communique Issued

The British Air Ministry communique today said:

"During the last 24 hours a number of successful reconnaissances over Heligoland and the German north sea coast as well as large areas of the interior of western Germany.

In the course of the night, in addition to standing patrol of the Frisian Islands, our aircraft reconnoitred important seaports in northern Germany and the Baltic while others operating over central Germany penetrated as far as Berlin.

"All our aircraft have returned."

WIFE OF ACCUSED HELPS HUSBAND

would call 57 witnesses and Defence Attorney Leo Healy said some of his witnesses would be summoned from Canada.

An all-Christian jury was chosen after Jewish Veniremen, almost without exception, said they would be prejudiced because the slain man was a Nazi.

Women spectators were barred from the courtroom as the state charged "deliberate and premeditated murder" against Kehler.

Burton Turkus, Assistant District Attorney, told the jury that Kehler confessed bludgeoning the Nazi agent to death in a struggle resulting from offensive conduct on Engelberg's part.

"But there was no sign of a struggle in the bedroom of Dr. Engelberg's two-storey brick house in Brooklyn, where he was found in a pool of blood two days after the murder," Turkus said.

The prosecutor charged that Kehler had been in Dr. Engelberg's company "many times."

Turkus said Kehler fled to Scranton, Pa., where he picked up his wife, and then went to Canada where he was arrested two weeks later.

FREIGHTER ONE OF SIX ATTEMPTING

Six German ships were reported Feb. 13 to have left Spain in attempts to run the blockade to Germany. Two have been captured and another, the Orizaba, was reported last night to have sunk after striking a shoal near Hammerfest, Norway.

The British steamship Clan Morrison, 5,936 tons, out of Glasgow, hit a mine and went down in the North Sea, it was announced today.

Survivors of the vessel were landed at an east coast port on Sunday. One Lascar seaman was lost and 15 others were injured.

Buried Beneath Debris

One officer was buried beneath the debris caused by the explosion and members of the crew worked for half an hour to extricate him. He was injured seriously. The survivors took to three lifeboats and were later picked up by rescue vessels. The Clan Morrison, owned by the Clan Line Steamers, Ltd., carried 15 officers and a Lascar crew.

British and neutral shipping losses for the week ending Sunday night were reported as the lowest of any week in the war. Four British ships of 17,778 tons and three neutrals of 8,850 tons were reported sunk.

The report was in contrast with the previous week, in which losses of five British and 15 neutral ships, with total tonnage of 86,077, were the war's highest for one week.

Submarines Blamed for One Sinking

Submarines were blamed for only one sinking last week, compared with 74,524 tons of the previous week's losses.

In addition to the Clan Morrison, the week's British losses were given as the British Endeavour Royal Archer and Loch Maddy and neutrals as the Tara and Petten of the Netherlands, and Santos of Sweden.

Three ships sunk the previous week also were named the Steindstad of Norway, Denhaag of the Netherlands and Aase of Denmark.

Average weekly loss of British and neutral shipping since the war began Sept. 3 was placed at 13 ships of 43,700 tons.

FINNS WITHDRAW TO NEW POSITIONS

Aim At Encirclement.

The communique indicated the Russians were aiming at some sort of encirclement of Viipuri—the immediate goal of the great Russian "February offensive" on the Isthmus of Karelia.

It was assumed that the Russians no longer are blocked by Koivisto's heavy guns, which anchored the western end of the Mannerheim Line, and that they are preparing to swing wide to the west, perhaps attempting to cross the ice on the Bay of Viipuri in order to effect a pincer move against Viipuri itself.

The communique indicated also that the Finnish Air Force now is in a position to conduct long-range bombing flights as well as to engage in defensive activity. It was stated that an enemy air base "far behind the enemy lines" was among the objectives bombed.

Continue Attacks.

The Russians also continued attacks on the Isthmus of Karelia in their drive toward Viipuri against desperately fighting Finnish forces at Somme, Naykkijaervi, Lake Perojoki, Ayrapaanjaervi and Salmenkaita, the high command said in its daily communique.

These positions are in the Mannerheim Line southeast and east of Viipuri, and have been mentioned in previous Finnish communiques as scenes of fierce combat.

"The enemy suffered heavy casualties. The fighting continues," the communique said, but did not mention whether the Russians had advanced or been repulsed.

"Our troops captured large quantities of infantry arms and destroyed eighteen tanks," the communique said of this action.

At the extreme opposite end of the Mannerheim Line, at Taipale on the shore of Lake Ladoga, the Finns "again repelled a powerful enemy attack," said the communique, "hurling the enemy back to his starting positions."

The Finns announced a large Russian offensive against Taipale last week as the invaders attempted to turn this eastern flank of the Mannerheim defences.

New Offensive Launched.

Reports from Norway indicated the Red army also was attacking anew in the Petsamo region of the far north, placing an additional drain on Finland's meagre reserves.

(A Russian communique reported the capture of the 788th Finnish defensive fortification, 10,000 shells and over 5,000,000 cartridges. The shells, cartridges and 26 fortifications were taken in the Oivisto area, the communique said.)

Without attempting to minimize the loss of Koivisto's heavy guns which controlled the entrance to Viipuri (Viborg) harbor and anchored the western end of the Mannerheim Line, the Finns pointed out the full effect of the loss would not be felt until spring, when the ice breaks up and there might be developments which would present a more favorable picture for Finland.

A Finnish officer explained the Finns were defending and then gradually withdrawing along the Karelian Isthmus while exacting a heavy toll on advancing troops. The retreat was to conserve manpower, he said.

Withdrawal An Advantage.

The withdrawals indicated the Finns were retreating deeper into the Karelian Isthmus "bottleneck" between Viipuri and Lake Ladoga. This will shrink the Karelian Isthmus front from approximately 68 miles to 50 miles, to the advantage of the smaller Finnish forces.

Should the Russians smash through this bottleneck defence they might be able to fan out through a greater part of south-eastern Finland.

At the same time, the Finns shortened and tightened their isthmus defences in front of the deserted city of Viipuri for a desperate stand against the Russian advance. Latest Finnish reports placed the Russians about 7½ miles from the city.

(The Russians said the Finns had attempted a counter-attack on the isthmus, but had been repulsed with the "heavy losses". Five Finnish tanks were reported damaged and three captured by the Russians.)

Norwegians at Kirkenes reported the first Finnish planes seen in the Petsamo region since the war started were engaging the Russians in intense combat, while the Red army fought against Finnish ground defences.

(The Russian communique said nineteen Finnish planes were shot down yesterday, but did not give details.)

BRITISH COASTAL SHIP SHELLED BY MISTAKE

Japanese Consulate Settles Damage in Record Time

NO CASUALTIES

Shanghai, Feb. 27 (AP)—Japanese shelling of a British coastal steamer "by mistake" was disclosed today with an account of a diplomatic exchange which perhaps set a record for settlement of such incidents.

The passenger-freight ship Hunan, owned by the British firm of Butterfield and Swire, sustained minor damage to her superstructure from one shell, but no casualties.

The attack took place off Chefoo, on the east coast, apparently yesterday, although the date was not made clear.

Pieced together from diplomatic accounts, this is what happened.

1. A Japanese torpedo boat sighted the Hunan and dispatched a boat to check her papers as has been the custom for the past two years.

2. As the boat neared the Hunan a light shell was fired from the torpedo boat. It struck the superstructure.

3. The torpedo boat at once dispatched a second boat carrying additional officers who apologized and said the shot was fired by mistake. They explained that a junior officer had intended to fire a blank over the Hunan's bow.

4. The Japanese offered to pay damages, estimated at $200.

5. Japanese naval authorities at Tsingtao apologized further to the British consul there.

6. The British consul consulted the British Embassy and accepted the apology on embassy instructions.

7. The British Embassy marked the case as closed.

passed through the contraband control and were "most carefully watched" with the exception of shipments to Vladivostok, which did not pass through the control.

He gave assurances that "we will use our bargaining and other powers to the full" in keeping neutrals from trading with Germany.

Sir John Simon, Chancellor of the Exchequer, told the House there would be no resort to currency depreciation as a means of stimulating export trade.

BULLDOG GETS SPIFFED

Omaha, Neb., Feb. 27—(AP)—The Omaha Humane Society doesn't quite know what to do about this one:

A woman appealed to the society to halt beer tavern loungers from setting them up for her English bulldog. The dog has acquired the habit of going for a stroll after lunch, and coming back distinctly spiffed, she complained.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

$200 TURNED OVER TO THE V.O.N.

With all receipts and accounts received, the Y's Men's Club of Belleville announced, at their weekly luncheon last evening, that the sum of $200.00 had been turned over to the local branch of the Victorian Order of Nurses obtained as the effort of the annual V.O.N. ice carnival, which was sponsored by the Y's men at the Hume Arena last month.

"Although the expenses entailed were slightly in excess of those we had anticipated, the response of the public was exceedingly gratifying and we were able to present the V.O.N. with $200.00 after all expenses had been paid." President Harold Vaughan told his fellow Y'smen last evening. The annual V.O.N. ice carnival has been presented and supported in Belleville for the past eight years as one of the city's annual charity presentations.

BELLEVILLE FAIR TO HAVE SATURDAY DATE

A delegation from the Belleville Agricultural Society waited upon the Belleville Parks Commission, at the latter's semi-monthly meeting last evening and at which time the Fair Board tendered their potential dates for the annual Belleville Fair. The Parks Board granted the dates submitted, which will be Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Aug. 29th, 30th and 31st this year. This is the first time in the history of the Belleville Fair, that a Saturday date has been adopted by the local Fair Board. Otherwise only routine business was conducted by the Board, which met under Chairman W. A. Woodley in the City Hall last night.

FALLING ICICLE JUST MISSES WOMAN PEDESTRIAN

"Heads up" would be a motto well worthy of consideration by Front Street pedestrians these days if they would protect their heads from a shower of ice descending from above.

Snow melting from the roof-tops of Front Street business blocks, which slope towards the sidewalk, and forming into icicles as it drips from frozen eave-troughs is presenting a danger to pedestrians walking along the street. Crashing to the pavement after the afternoon's sun had loosened it from the roof above, a long slender icicle just barely missed a woman and baby carriage on the sidewalk yesterday, and merchants might well be advised to remove this danger if it exists on their premises before someone is injured by falling ice.

A nomination will be held in the immediate future to select a candidate for the position of councillor to succeed Mr. English.

The Quaternion Y.P.U., 60 strong, met in Front Road Church last night and after a sing-song led by Harry Atkinson with Miss Betty Shorey at the piano, Miss Helen Thompson, president, and Don Alexander, secretary, took charge and after conducting the business asked "Bob" Brennan to conduct the devotions. He was assisted by Bill Brennan and Don Alexander in an impressive, reverent and helpful service. Miss Spencer then took charge of the program for the evening and the following read papers on the subject of "Truth," Miss Aileen Williams, Miss E. Bedal, Miss K. Johnson, Miss Eva Smith and Mr. Ralph Greatrix. Miss L. Haight rendered a piano solo. Miss Jean Matthews had charge of the games after which the refreshment committee, with Miss Helen Brown as convener, served lunch. Messrs A. D. Archibald, R. L. Johnson, Charles Green, "Bud" Woodley and W. Wonnacott assisted with their cars. This was one of the happiest and most helpful meetings of the year. Special interest is being shown in the next meeting, which deals with the platforms of the political parties of Canada.

FRAMES ARMY PAY

Cape Town (CP)—Recruiting in South Africa has attracted some wealthy business men into the ranks. One framed his first months pay, saying he "never worked so hard in his life," and was "proud of it."

MISS D. ANDERSON GIVES ADDRESS

The Senior B.Y.P.U. of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church heard an interesting address Monday evening when Miss Della Anderson spoke on the subject of "The Common Bond". The Bible, with its ten commandments and the teachings of Jesus Christ fixed a sane level or a common bond for all mankind, Miss Anderson stated; nationalism, colorf, difference of language could all be swept away by this common bond and there could be no universal peace until all mankind understood each other according to God's plan.

The Devotional Group was in charge of the meeting with Mr. W. Hales in the chair. Scripture was read by Miss Helen Wilson and meditation by Miss Edna Jobson. Two delightful piano selections were played by Miss Muriel Saunders, a guest artist. Closing prayer was offered by Miss Bernice Hanna.

Second Ice Coating Cut From Channel

City workmen, power saws, trucks, hoists and team of horses returned to the ice-cutting wars in the ice field south of the C.P.R. bridge today following a week-end onslaught by Jack Frost that left a thickness of six inches of ice on the open water of the channel.

Cutting of the channel in the icefield was completed on Friday night, with sixteen hundred tons of ice removed and trucked to Allen's Marsh a short distance south-west of the channel.

Sub-zero temperatures however, caused ice formations of six inches to form on the surface of the open water of the channel, and saws and other equipment started today to remove the covering.

The ice was sawn around the edges, hoisted to the main body of the icefield in large chunks and hauled away to the marsh. Workmen will keep a close watch on the channel, City Engineer Charles Mott said today, and in the event of further cold snaps will keep the channel open.

Small open stretches of water in the Moira River caused by the mild weather of last week are again covered with solid surfaces of ice.

$500 Needed to Put Campaign Over the Top

With over fifteen hundred dollars in the coffers of the campaign treasurer, five hundred dollars short of the objective, officials of the Army and Navy Veterans, Belleville Branch, announced yesterday that if the quota is not obtained at the expiration of the campaign date, an extension will be granted.

However, campaign officials and canvassers were optimistic that such an extension would not be necessary and are redoubling their efforts in order to have the quota of $2,000 collected by the date of campaign expiry.

With reports trickling in from all parts of the province that certain districts have already made their quota, and some well over the required sum, officials feel confident that the residents of the city will respond as generously as before and send Belleville "over the top."

Trenton Rotarians Defeat Lansdowne To Win Round 13-12

Trenton, Feb. 27.—(Special) — Trenton Rotarians will proceed into the next round of Junior "C" play-downs meeting Cobourg in the next round after polishing off the Lansdowne sextette in the return game at Lansdowne last night by an 8-7 score and a round total of 13-12. The win, however, was a costly one as Joe Reid, brilliant winger, broke his hand and will be out for the season, when he crashed into the boards during a spirited play. The Trenton team was tied with Lansdowne in the first period and then ran up a three-goal lead in the early part of the second frame but the accident to Reid unbalanced the team and Lansdowne was able to draw even, the team retiring at the end of the second frame all square. The Trenton squad fought back in the third frame and with only six minutes to play, eked out an 8-6 margin but Lansdowne desperately trying to avoid elimination registered one counter but could not get the tieing marker past Frost. Incidentally "Torchy" Frost, goalie for the Rotarians stood out in the win, the fans agreeing that the Frankford youth put up a three-star performance in the twine. The fans are beginning to appreciate the value of their team in Trenton and the boys are assured of enthusiastic support in their next round with Cobourg.

ACTOR HERBERT MARSHALL TO MARRY

Los Angeles, Feb. 27 (AP)—The Times says actor Herbert Marshall and Lee Russell, screen actress, left Hollywood last night for Las Vegas, Nev., to be married. The newspaper earlier had reported them married, but a check failed to confirm this. Each has been married once.

CHAPTER XI

Hyacinth drew up the car at the corner of a narrow lane. She glanced meditatively at the hedge, whose every leaf and twig were picked out in the glare of the headlights. Should she leave the car there? No. Its position at this corner would give her away as surely as if it were seen outside Bob Cheaveleys house. In a car one couldn't hide one's tracks. One could only trust to luck.

Slowly, she bumped on over the uneven surface. She switched off the lights. No use in advertising her whereabouts to some laborer plodding home. That would start gossip. Why was she there? Once more she asked herself that question and knew of no clear answer. Bob Cheaveley had told—asked— her to come. And somehow, though he had added no inducement to the few words of that invitation, it had seemed wiser to accept.

The deep blackness of the hedge was within two feet. She must turn on the lights. After all, the night was too dark for blind driving. She must trust still further to fate. Why be uneasy? After all, her luck always held, hadn't it?

She took out a cigarette. The light from the dashboard illumined her face as she stooped to the electric lighter. A cigarette would calm her.

"Well! Well!" came a jovial familiar voice from the darkness.

In sudden causeless panic she leapt in her seat. A man's hand appeared on the ledge of the window. Laughter, as jovial as the voice, rang in her ears. The door opened. Major Cheaveley's face— florid, handsome, amused—was within a few inches of hers. He entered the car, taking the seat beside her. "What's the matter with the lights?"

Hyacinth made no answer. "I — didn't hear your footsteps," she said finally.

"No." He put out a finger and switched on the headlights. "Drive on, Hyacinth. You don't want to sit in a dark lane with me half the night. Or do you?"

She didn't speak. The car crept forward. Major Cheaveley looked once more at the lovely profile beside him. Again, more gently, he laughed.

In the beam of light, Fallows rose before them. Uncared for, it looked; almost ugly, the plaster peeling from its bricks. Hyacinth surveyed it.

"Don't stare at my poor Fallows," Major Cheaveley said. "It's not your future home—not as grand as that. It's like a plain woman, warm-hearted. Lights in the windows, a fire on the hearth; everything cozy."

He clicked open the garden gate. Hyacinth got out of the car. Half-way up the narrow flagged path she stopped. "Look here, Bob, why did you ask me to come?"

"I had something to say to you."

"Why didn't you come to Oaken?"

"Because at Oaken there's always someone about; your foxy young sister or your beautiful mother or your handsome young man. He is handsome. Rich, too and younger than I am."

"You can say what you have to say, out here." Hyacinth had tried to sound cool. careless. Instead, her voice was stubborn. And that was to near frightened. There was nothing of which to be afraid.

"My dear girl, our afairs are very private. Indoors, my walls have no ears. As to Mrs. Brown, she's deaf as a post, worse luck. Never hears a bell."

Hyacinth half turned towards the car. Major Cheaveley took her by the wrist. It was a gentle hold, as gentle as a woman's, quite loose. But she couldn't free her hand. "Come on, my dear," he said, quietly.

They walked up the path towards the house. Major Cheaveley closed the front door behind them. The little passage hall was unlit. He had released her hand, but she was conscious of his massive presence beside her in the darknes. She tripped, stumbling. His arm, hard as iron, held her up. He opened a door. Hyacinth hung back on the threshold of a dim-lit room. A fire smoldered on the hearth. Before it sat an elderly woman asleep in an easy chair.

"Oho!" His eyebrows rose. "Old Brown taking advantage of my absence." He went over to the hearth. "Mrs. Brown!" he said. The woman didn't move. 'Mrs. Brown!' He shook her. "Wake up!' '

She raised her head and stared up at him. Slowly she struggled out of the chair and stood, rubbing her hands together. She did not look at Hyacinth. "I didn't know ye'd be back. I didn't mean no 'arm. Dropped asleep—"

"Get on back to your kitchen."

She dropped an old-fashioned curtsy. With a sidelong motion she went towards the door. She passed within a foot of Hyacinth and still she did not look at her. The door closed behind her.

"A little squalid?" said Major Cheaveley. "Not quite what you'd expect in a gentleman's house? Well, well—servants take advantage of a bachelor."

Hyacinth didn't answer.

"You're not talkative this evening Hyacinth. Sit down. You don't need to stand by the door. You're as safe in a chair by the fire."

She advanced slowly. "Well, well," he said, "and you've never been here before, although we've been such friends." He stood before the fire, tall and massive, looking down at her, sideways. "Isn't that strange?" Suddenly the smile left his face. "And now what's all this about an engagement?"

"I'm going to marry Alan Fleming".

"Of Holme Dacey." He nodded. "But we had a little understanding. hadn't we, Hyacinth?" he said.

"I—" she paused for a second. Her voice fluttered. "I've changed my mind, Bob."

"And what did you think I should do?"

"I—didn't think about it. I was sorry—"

"Oh, yes, you thought about it." His eyes were still on hers. He sat down, his hands clasped lightly before him. "But I was to have been in South America, wasn't I? And when I got back I was to find that my lovely girl had gone to another man."

There was a silence. Hyacinth leant back in her chair, one arm behind her head. "Did you get me here just to scold me, Bob?" Her brows were raised, her smile a little pitiful.

"Hyacinth—" his voice was low. His glance met hers, and she whitened. "Take my advice. Don't try the effect of your charms on me, now. It mightn't be quite what you hope."

She tried to speak.

"I got you here on business." he crossed one leg over the other. "Does that surprise you? You owe me two thousand pounds."

"You've got the jewels."

"They're no use to me." His white teeth showed. "They're not mine to sell, nor yours. They're your young sister's."

"I'll replace them."

"How? You're a little fool, Hyacinth. Because there are three years before Tony comes of age, you think something will turn up to save you."

There was a silence. Then: "Give me back the jewels," Hyacinth muttered, "I'll sell them."

"No, my dear. The sordid little story might come out. What you need is punishment. But you see the punishment might fall on me."

"Bob, I haven't go two thousand pounds."

"Then I advise you to get it, I give you a week, Hyacinth."

'And if I don't? If I can't?"

"Then, it's quite simple, I shall go to Alan Fleming."

Hyacinth rose. Major Cheaveley rose too. Swiftly, he moved, and now she was in his arms. Helpless.

"Unless you break off this engagement."

"And then?" She stared up into that older, florid face.

"And marry me. As you promised." His arms tightened. His eyes bore down hers. "You're made for me. I can manage you. You'd have no secrets from me."

"I can't Bob!" In terror she glanced round, almost as if the decision might not rest with her. The unkempt room seemed to press in on her.

"Very well." His arms released her. He stepped back. "Then you'll produce that money, or you'll be in deep water. But you'll come whining to me to marry you in the end."

XII

Alan Fleming walked back across the tussocky grass of the park. The day was bitterly cold.

He had been over to his own place. Everything now was ready for his occupation. A bachelor establishment, but not for long. In three months from now he would lead his bride home after a month of honeymoon. Till then, though his visit to Oaken was nearly ended, he would meet Hyacinth almost every day. He would see her, too, out hunting—as he had seen her the first time. For a moment there came to him the clearest picture: Hyacinth in her hard hat, her stock and the veil which showed through its mesh all the more clearly the delicate brilliance of her skin. "Love at first sight"; so it had been with him. That strange beauty of hers, so flawless—at that first meeting he had felt as if it pierced him.

His thoughts returned to his present happiness. Tonight, he remembered, he would take her to the Lendrums' dance. There he would display his future bride and receive a hundred congratulations; and there to the sound of music he would hold her in his arms.

A rook cried harshly in the tall elms above him. He looked up. Across the pale grass ran a stout post-and-rails, and there, leaning on the rail, her back to him, stood a girl. Tony. He had not seen her for three days—not since he had turned her out of the dining room. He had asked Hyacinth yesterday what had become of her young sister. She had smiled, frowning a little. "Oh, Alan, Tony's sulking."

He would have walked on now and left her standing there, but something in that motionless figure struck him. In this bitter cold she wore only a jacket and skirt.

He crossed the grass towards her. She did not move. His footsteps sounded on the hard ground. He stood near her. He could hear her breath, uneven. "Tony."

She did not move.

"Tony." Quietly, he repeated her name. There was a moment's pause. At last, with a little gesture as if after all it didn't matter, she turned to face him. She had been crying. She was crying now. Her face was pinched with cold.

"What is it?" he asked gently.

Her long hazel eyes came round to his. Again he felt a sensation, strange and slight, as if something struck lightly on his heart.

At last she spoke. "I do—do so want to see Jacky."

"Very well," he said, "then I'll take you to her." He didn't look at her. He knew what he would see in her face and, for some reason that he could not have explained, he didn't choose to be touched again by what she looked or said. Abruptly he turned. Together they walked up the back drive. He turned towards the stables. "You'd better go and get a coat."

"But I don't need—"

"Run along."

He didn't turn his head to see that she obeyed. An instant later he heard her footsteps scudding towards the house. She took longer than he had expected. He had been waiting some minutes before he saw her moving swiftly through the dusk. He opened the door of the car. She flung herself on to the seat beside him. She had not put on a hat. Something bulged the front of her coat.

"What have you got there?"

"Only Woodville. He's quite clean." She looked at him timidly, as if she feared that Jacky's old toy might be taken from her.

He nodded. She dropped back into silence.

The hospital corridor smelt of iodoform. The sound of footsteps echoed, magnified. An electric sign said "Matron." At the end was a white door marked "Private Ward". Alan knocked.

'Come in!' said a child's voice.

He opened the door and stood aside so that Tony might pass him. For a moment he remained in the passage. Where he had expected a cry of delight there was silence.

He entered. Jacky was sitting up in bed. Her face was colorless. Her eyes seemed darker than ever. She smiled, gazing up at her sister. "Mr. Fleming brought me, Jacky," Tony said.

Jacky's eyes turned to him. Her polite glance showed surprise. "Thank you very much. How do you do?" She held out a too-bony little hand.

"How do you do, shrimp?"

"Quite well, thank you."

"Look, Jacky, what I've brought!" Tony tugged at the breast of her big coat.

"Woodville!" Transfixed, Jacky stared at the limp, moth-eaten bear. Propped against Tony's hand, it sat on the bed between them. Jacky fingered the scarlet jacket which it wore. "But he's got a new coat—"

"I got it. I thought he'd like it."

"Oh, Tony, I'm so pleased! And Woodville's pleased—" Jacky took the bear in her arms.

Tony, seated on the bed, didn't speak. There was no need. The silence was one of happines and peace. It was like—what was it like. Alan wondered? It was as if he saw them on an enchanted island. He would not have stayed to disturb them with an alien presence, only that he had promised the Sister to see that Jacky wasn't excited. Odd, how out of it one was. And odder still that one should notice it. A child of eleven and one of seventeen.

Tony's eyes were on Jacky's face. "Is it good for you to talk, darling?"

"Oh, yes. But I musn't laugh. It hurts like anything to laugh."

"Are they kind to you, sweet?" Tony asked.

"Very kind. If you could be here, I'd like to stay here always."

A silence followed on that rather dreary little reply, whose implications Alan didn't for the moment examine. "Do you think Woodville would like to have a horse to ride?" he asked.

"Oh, he would."

"I'll get one for him tomorow."

"He will be pleased. Thank you very much." Jacky had flushed with pleasure.

Tony caught Alan's glance. He saw the anxiety in her eyes. "I think we ought to go," he said gently.

"Oh, no. Not yet!" Jacky clutched at her sister's hand. "I'm not tired. Truly."

"Sweet, be good. Then they'll let me come again."

"When will you come?"

"Soon."

"But how? Will he bring you?" Jacky looked from Alan to Tony. "Are you friends now?"

For one second Tony hesitated. She didn't glance at Alan. He saw the deep color on her cheek. "Yes," she said.

There was a little silence. Alan rose and held out his hand. But Jacky was staring at the door. Slowly, the door opened. There came a silken rustling. "And how is my little girl?" asked a trilling voice. Mrs. Querne entered. In that instant Tony's face changed, and Jacky's. They became expressionless.

"Dear, dear!" Mrs. Querne smiled at Alan and at Tony. "Two visitors. Is that wise?" She approached the bed.

"Our visit has been harmless, I think," Alan said.

Mrs. Querne shook her head. "Emotional. We're always trying to keep Jacky from that sort of thing. So bad for a child."

"There has been nothing of that kind." Alan's voice was cold.

Jacky drew a long breath. Tony, her hand in Jacky's looked down at that drawn little face.

"I think we had better go," he said.

"I think so too." Mrs. Querne approached the bed. She stooped and kissed Jacky.

"My poor little darling."

Jackey opened her eyes. She gave her mother a long glance. "Why did you kiss me, Mother?" The words were very clear. "You never do."

TWEED DEFEATS STIRLING BY 6-1

Third Successive Victory Hung Up by Tweed Squad and Appear Out of Slump

Tweed, February 27—(Special)—Tweed defeated Stirling last night at the local arena by a score of 6 to 1 for their third successive victory. The homesters have snapped out of their slump during which they ran into a string of losses, and should be in top form for the play-offs, which begin next week. Despite the one-sided score the game was decidedly interesting in spots and the red and white sweatered boys from Stirling gave all they had to stave off defeat.

In the opener they matched the locals as fast ice resulted in speedy hockey. Both teams missed several chances, especially the locals who found Fox, visiting goalie, on top of his form, giving probably the smartest exhibition of netminding seen in Tweed this year. Reeves, in the local net, also turned in his usual good game. Marsh opened the scoring with Elsbury getting the assist with two minutes to go, the only goal of the period.

Tweed outscored the visitors three goals to one in the second frame, during which they broke through Stirling defense at will, only to have Fox make several spectacular stops. At the seven minute mark, Marsh got goal number two, and a few minutes later passed out to Joe Courneyea who deflected the rubber into the twine. Courneyea scored again on Elsbury's perfect pass two minutes later, and while Tummon was serving a penalty Fraser scored the visitors' only counter.

Two quick goals at the half-way mark of the final stanza ran the locals' total to six. Elsbury scoring from Courneyea, and Marsh from Elsbury. Porritt and Marsh drew penalties in this period.

Fox was easily the outstanding player for the visitors with Walker, Fraser and Richardson also playing well. Orr and Tummon made a splendid defense for Reeves, while the front line turned in one of its best games with Elsbury showing a great turn of speed.

J. Ackers, Stirling and G. Quinn, Tweed, refereed. Tweed drew four penalties, all minors.

AT THE BELLE

"20,000 Men a Year."

For smash entertainment, with a theme as timely as tomorrow's headlines and romance to thrill you, run down to the Belle Theatre and see "20,000 Men a Year."

This stimulatingly fresh Cosmopolitan production for 20th Century-Fox concerns the college youth of the nation, who are taking to the sky thousands strong in the year old Civil Aeronautic Authority program for training civilian fliers.

As you know, the purpose of this program is the stimulation of private flying as a means of promoting commerce and contributing to the progress of American aviation.

The film, which features Randolph Scott, Preston Foster and Margaret Lindsay, is told from the viewpoint of the girls who love them and the men who train these eager lads.

Executive producer Sol M. Wurtzel lined up a great supporting cast, headed by Mary Healy, who fulfills the promise she showed in Irving Berlin's "Second Fiddle," in a romantic role opposite Robert Shaw; George Ernest (of the Jones Family films); Jane Darwell, Kane Richmond and Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom, the fighter who has become one of the screen's champ comedians. Here's a picture that has everything! You'll love it.

"The Honeymoon's Over"

Romance in an office is quite different from love in a cottage and the difference makes for hilarious comedy in the 20th Century-Fox picture announced as the accompanying feature attraction. Stuart Erwin and Marjorie Weaver are the newlyweds, two months' married, and while Marjorie looks cute in shorts, that doesn't pay the bills! The film is chuckle-full of human incidents, hilarious accidents, amazing experiences and riotous adventures. Patric Knowles, Russell Hicks, Jack Carson, Hobart Cavannaugh, June Gale and E. E. Clive are included in the cast.

The Belle News of the Hour, with its important News Events from "over there" and at home, will be exhibited on the same program.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Assassin of Youth"

With hundreds crowding the theatre last night, the widely discussed motion picture, "The Assassin of Youth" got off to a record-breaking engagement at the Capitol. Powerful, thrilling and pointing out a great moral lesson, this film more than lives up to the claims made for it by the producer. It deals principally with the evils of the marijuana weed which modern youth in many instances has taken to smoking in order to experience new thrills. While little is known of it by the general public, welfare officials, ministerial associations and police officials have been waging battles secretly to prevent its use becoming wide-spread. However, now and then stories have crept into the papers in various parts of the United States exposing marijuana parties in which the participants were largely youths of high school age. While the cast boast no Hollywood names of great importance it comprises players who especially fit into their particular roles.

The added feature "Rich Man Poor Girl", a comedy riot kept the audience in chuckles throughout, an all star cast including Robert Young, Lew Ayers, Ruth Hussey and Guy Kibbee give their usual good performance. The universal news of the day concludes the program.

Recently the near eastern army of the Allies was reinforced by an expeditionary force from Australia and New Zealand. If the war should shift to the Near East, General Weygand would command the united Allied army.

GERMANY OFFERS TO GUARANTEE RUMANIA'S BORDERS FOR INCREASED SHIPMENTS TO REICH

Friendly Relations With Allies Seen Bar to Proposal

Promise for Support of Plan Includes Abandonment of Territorial Claims on Rumania by Hungary, Bulgaria and Soviet Russia

SPONSOR NEW RAILWAY

If Plan Adopted by Rumania Demobilization of 1,000,000 of Army Would Take Place Immediately—Germany's Economic Expert Postpones Visit to Rumania for Week

Bucharest, Feb. 28 (AP)—Authoritative quarters said today Germany had offered to guarantee Rumania's borders in return for huge increases in oil, wheat and other raw material shipments to the Reich.

These sources said the plan was submitted while the Rumanan cabinet considered issuing a royal decree for virtual civil mobilization to accompany military mobilization undertaken in part.

Acceptance of the German plan, it was said, would oblige Rumania to abandon her plan for civil mobilization and send at least 1,000,000 of her 1,400,000 men under arms back to their jobs in fields and factories.

The German plan also was said to include a promise to prevail upon Hungary, Bulgaria and Soviet Russia to abandon their territorial claims on Rumania and sign non-aggression pacts with her.

To Sponsor Railway

Germany was reported ready to sponsor a new railway agreement between Rumania and Hungary to make it easier to transport vital supplies to the Reich.

Authoritative quarters said it was extremely doubtful whether Rumania would accept the plan because the price—a virtual Nazi monopoly of her exports—was considered far too high.

The proposed civil mobilization order would give the government control of all industry similar to the plan already in operation in Turkey.

The recent favorable trend of French and British relations with Rumania, wherein the Allies resumed shipping raw materials, war planes and armaments to Rumania was seen as another bar to the German proposal.

Meanwhile, Rumania was scheduled to call an additional 200,000 reservists to the colors March 1, swelling the army to 1,600,000—virtually general mobilization.

Why The Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Winter's gift to spring! The legacy of winter is an accumulation of old snow that has done good service in protecting as a blanket the winter wheat crop, and now is to do further service, especially when lying at higher levels, in furnishing water for power and irrigation purposes. The old snow is compacted and is about one-half water; that is, ten inches when melted would amount to about five inches of water. About this time of the year snow surveys are made so that power and irrigation engineers may tell how much water is available. This is done by carefully weighing samples of snow at various places in a watershed, and from these determining the amount compared with other years.

Meat Content and Price of Sausage Issue Raised

London, Feb. 28 (CP)—Food Minister Morrison told the House of Commons today that the meat content and the price of sausages will soon be a matter for the government's decision.

Seeking reassurance on this point, R. Sorenson, Labor, remarked, when the House broke into laughter, "however humorous the subject might seem, it is far from humorous when working people paid for sausages and found they had bought a large proportion of bread."

Mr. Morrison replied that the people still have the protection of the Food and Drug Act.

Settlement Seen Over Contraband

London, Feb. 28 (CP) — The Financial Times said today that Great Britain and the United States, after exchanging notes on questions rising out of Allied contraband control, are expected to reach a settlement immediately.

The United States has protested against what it termed "undue detention" of American ships at examination bases and also the examination of mail.

The newspaper also reported that the New York commodity exchange had forbidden its members to buy tin for re-export.

Tavern Operator Shoots Self in Remorse for Remark

Kansas City, Feb. 28—(AP)—Walter Hutchin, tavern operator, told his partner, William Gott, after two losing business ventures:

"If I didn't have any more sense than you have, I'd blow my brains out."

Two days later, Gott did.

That was seven years ago.

Hutchin brooded over Gotts suicide. Among southwestern cattlemen who went to his tavern to drink and gamble in Kansas City's wilder days he was known as "a square John." But he couldn't square his own conscience.

He was found fatally wounded in his office yesterday. Detectives Charles Wyatt said Hutchin, 57, still blaming himself for Gott's death, had fired a bullet into his own brain.

British Skipper Astonishes Captors By Asking Them to Cancel Golf Date

London, Feb. 28 (CP)—Viscountess Astor told the Golf Union a new story about the Graf Spee today which, she said, had been recounted to her by an officer of H.M.S. Exeter, one of the cruisers which participated in the battle with the German raider.

The story concerned one of the merchant skippers held prisoner on the Graf Spee. Although his ship was about to be blown up, the skipper went back to his cabin for his golf clubs and came aboard the Graf Spee with the bag slung over his shoulders.

The moment he reached the raider's deck, he astonished his captors by asking them to send a message to Montevideo cancelling an engagement he had made for a golf match there the following weekend.

Lady Astor did not say whether the Germans sent the message.

Ears of Germans Dinned With Nazi 'Hymn of Hate' Against British People

German People Hear of Nothing but Triumph of Militarism From German Radio Broadcasts—BBC Takes 24-Hour-Day Record of Outflow of Foreign Stations, Including German

By SAM ROBERTSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Feb. 28—(CP)— The German radio beats an incessant anti-British "hymn of hate" into the ears of the people of the Third Reich and beyond.

No matter what the occasion Prime Minister Chamberlain is always "Der Oberkriegshetzer Chamberlain", or "Archwarmonger Chamberlain." The British Empire is never mentioned without being preceded by "blood - stained," "dripping with blood" or "blood-thirsty." The British Navy invariably is termed "the British Pirates."

A reputed veteran often is brought before the microphone to tell a blood-chilling tale of ill-treatment at the hands of the British in the last war. And despite internationally - accepted evidence to the contrary, the inglorious defeat of the pocket battleship Graf Spee is still put down to use of gas shells by the British cruisers that put it to flight or to what is termed the partial treatment of Uruguayan Governmen.

British Take Records of 'Hate' Programs

These are only a few of the ways in which the radio is used by the Hitler regime to drum Germans up to war pitch. The extent of this became known when the British Broadcasting Corporation opened an international "listening post" at which the outflow of foreign stations is recorded 24 hours a day.

This revealed that the Nazis follow three main themes in their radio-ranting against the British Empire. Tireless are the efforts to make the word British synonomous with rottenness and to picture the Daughter's Love Life Fraught With Interruptions Due to A. R. P.

London, Feb. 28.— (CP)— The Blackout and A.R.P. raise problems for every Briton, but few more poignant than that which beset an "angty mother" in Hampstead whose daughter's love life was fraught with interruptions.

The Borough's A.R.P. Bulletin quoted this anonymous woman as saying that "a warden round here is not playing fair". She said, according to the bulletin, that her daughter always met "her boy" in an air raid shelter.

"Well," she continued, "a warden comes along and disturbs them. It is not the short one nor the very tall one nor the lady but the one who has a luminous S.W. on his hat.

"He comes to this shelter where are my girl and her boy. He flashes his light on them. Now is that fair after all why have we got shelters if they are not be used.

"After all if this is war we can't be dull. I do not like the A.R.P. and I object to my daughter having her pleasure spoilt. Please stop it."

Russians Threaten To Encircle Viipuri By Drive Over Bay

Finnish Command States "Enemy Suffered Heavily" in Fighting in Which Finns "Fought Defensive Action" — Artillery Fire "Lively"

TANKS DESTROYED

Finns Claim 521 Russian Planes Shot Down Since Beginning of War Estimated in Value at $42,500,000 — Also Reported 1,310 Tanks Destroyed or Captured

Helsinki, Feb. 28 (AP).—The Finnish High Command in only a brief reference to Russia's important drive on Viipuri on the Karelian Isthmus today said the "enemy suffered heavily" in fighting in which the Finnish troops "fought defensive actions".

In this fighting, which occurred yesterday, several Russian tanks were destroyed, the Finns said, and "artillery activity was lively on both sides".

This was the last space given to the isthmus fighting in the daily communique for some time. Yesterday's statement disclosed that the Russians were threatening to encircle Viipuri with a drive across the island-dotted ice-crusted Bay of Viipuri.

Air Activity Concentrated.

Of the war in the air the high command said that "enemy air activity in the war zone was concentrated on the Karelian Isthmus and the area northeast of Lake Ladoga."

The Finns said they repulsed Russian attempts to advance northeast of Lake Ladoga and that "operations against surrounded enemy positions continued" at Kuhno, farther north.

The Finns said their own air force "bombed enemy troop-columns, munitions dumps, communications and certain military objectives on the Gulf of Finland and its coasts."

In the final two weeks of the campaign leading Liberal and Conservative speakers probably will devote most of their energies to Ontario where the Liberals held 58 seats at dissolution and the Conservatives 25. The other seat was a United Farmer of Ontario-Labor.

Miners Stage 'Sit Down' Strike In Pioneer Mine

Pioneer, B.C., Feb. 28—(CP)—A five - months' - old strike took a grave turn today as an undetermined number of miners remained in a self-appointed prison in the depths of the Pioneer gold mine, 150 miles northeast of Vancouver in British Columbia's Bridge River district.

The strikers entered the mine early yesterday after tearing a padlock from a door which guards the No. 3 shaft. Union officials said the men had taken enough food to last them four days.

Estimates on the size of the group ranged from "about a dozen" to 78.

Company officials were informed of the entrance into the mine shaft by mine telephone after the men descended. Spokesmen said the men intended to remain in the mine until the strike is settled.

The strikers are members of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, affiliate of the Congress of Industrial organizations. They have been seeking union recognition and higher wages since the middle of last October.

Company officials, accompanied by Sergeant Woods-Johnson of the British Columbia police, descended into the mine yesterday afternoon but four hours later the police sergeant reported to the surface that the group had been unable to locate the strikers.

Loot in the holdup at Shedden, 10 miles west of St. Thomas, was reported at $1,020. A lone bandit entered the bank at closing time, cowed two employees and two customers with a revolver and fled in an automobile that had been parked outside the bank branch.

California Areas Flooded After Three-Day Rainfall

Rivers Flow Over Thousands of Acres of Rich Farm Land and City Areas

SLIDES BLOCK TRACKS

San Francisco, Feb. 28—(AP)—Vast sections of northern and central California lay under deep flood waters today and hundreds were homeless in the wake of a three-day rainstorm which the weather bureau said would continue another 36 hours. The downpour totalled almost nine inches during a 24-hour period in some places.

Swollen rivers poured over thousands of acres of rich farm lands and backed into city areas, slides blocked major rail and highway arteries and high winds whipped heavy seas against shorelines.

Officials of the state legislature considered calling a special session "for the purpose of taking such action as may be necessary under the unusual conditions caused by devastating floods."

70 Families were Evacuated

National guardsmen (militiamen) were ordered by Governor Culbert Olson to help evacuate 70 families from homes in Yolo county, where the Sacramento river was over its banks.

State Department of Agriculture officials said California's rich agricultural industry suffered extensive damage. The amount could not be estimated immediately.

The cities of Redding, in northern California, Napa in the north San Francisco Bay region, and Santa Cruz, on the central coast, saw flood waters covering extensive areas.

The only apparent death blamed on the flood was reported at Redding, where Irene Clemens was missing after an auto in which she was riding overturned into a swollen creek.

The Sacramento River, which courses hundreds of miles southward through one of the state's great valleys, was over its banks at several points, and weather officials reported yesterday "the situation appears to be grave" in the Sacramento valley.

EARS OF GERMANS DINNED WITH NAZI

Empire as falling apart at the seams. The lower class Briton forever is being told that he is the tool of plutocrats; that he is a victim of exploitation by the money-ed-class.

Attacks Aimed at Colonies

In short wave broadcasts aimed at the colonies and other parts of the Commonwealth Nazi announcers harp on the Old Country exploits them only for her own benefit, that she is a leech at the colonial breast.

A man who has been working at the BBC "listening post" eight hours a day since the war began told of some of the things he heard in an article in the London Daily Telegraph. He wrote:

"The martial note, which was so prominent in Nazi peace-time broadcasting, has now been greatly intensified. War is presented as just that rousing cavalcade of story book heroics which 1914-18 taught us it is not.

Militaristic Programs

"The atmosphere of airfields, submarine bases, mechanized units comes with compelling realism from the loudspeaker. Everywhere the travelling microphone finds nothing but triumph and inspiration. There are interminable march programs with effects designed to imitate the tramp of army boots. No sentimental melodies of the 'Long Way To Tipperary' kind. 'Mit Bombem and Granaten' (with bombs and grenades) is a title typical of scores."

One part of German radio propaganda that seems to be undergoing change is that directed by the Oxford - accented German broadcaster known as Lord Haw Haw. For months he attacked things British from every conceivable angle. Now, however, he spends the greater part of his time denying everything that in anyway reflects on Nazidom. That would seem to indicate Haw Haw is on the defensive.

In addition to locations previously announced schools will be set up at Edmonton, Ottawa, Calgary, Saskatoon, Prince Albert, Vancouver and Regina.

"No. 1 Air Observers School will be opened in May at Malton, Ont. The following month, No. 1 Elementary Flying Training School will also be opened at Malton, and No. 2 Elementary Flying Training School at Windsor Mills, Que.

"By July, it will be possible to announce the inauguration of No. 2 Air Observers School at Edmonton, while No. 1 Service Flying Training School, now at Camp Borden, will function as such during the same month.

"It has been decided to establish No. 2 Service Flying Training School in the vicinity of Ottawa, the Airport at Uplands having been selected as the site. It is expected that this will be opened in August together with No. 3 Elementary Flying Training School at London, Ont., and No. 4 Elementary Flying Training School at Fort William, Ontario.

Opened in September

"The third Service Flying Training school, which will be located in Calgary, is to be in operation next September, while No. 4 Service Flying Training School is to be opened in Saskatoon, and No. 6 Elementary Flying Training School in Prince Albert, next October. Prince Albert will also be the site of No. 8 Air Observer School to be opened later. November should see the inauguration of No. 4 Air Observers School at London. A Flying School will be established at Moncton on the site of the Department of Transport Airdrome.

"Negotiations are now pending with Vancouver and Regina for the use of Municipal Airports as sites for proposed Flying Schools."

The announcements are in accord with the progressive development of the plan which contemplates a total of some 70 schools, spread all across Canada.

The Schools come into operation in groups as they are ready and the staff is available to man them.

Flying Instructors School at Trenton

A Service Flying School, for intermediate and advanced flying training now is operating at Camp Borden. At Trenton a Flying Instructors' School and an Air Armament School are operating.

Interesting Drama Presented in Foxboro

Foxboro—"Eyes of Love", a three act drama, was presented to a packed house on Thursday, February 22, by a group of the Young People's Union of Foxboro United Church in the Sunday School room.

Keen interest in the event was revealed in that the hall was comfortably filled well before the hour of eight o'clock and by the time the curtain went up every available chair was occupied. Before the play commenced and between acts Mr. and Mrs. Don Rose of Holloway, entertained with old and modern popular music with piano and banjo. The play was under the direction of Mrs. John Gowsell assisted by Mrs. Wanda Sine and Mrs. George Priest. The staging was very effective as greater care than usual had been given to this feature. The importance of this was apparent to all. This being the first public presentation its initial success guarantees first class entertainment in all future appearances. The cast is already booked for Mount Pleasant in Rawdon Township.

The best commendation for any drama comes from those who go with little enthusiasm and then come away thoroughly satisfied and this was the experience for some at least on this occasion.

There is practically no slang in this play and no absurd murdering of the English language as is too common in the kind of dramas one may hear about the countryside. It is not hilariously funny and yet it has heaps of good humour, plenty of action and quite a number of surprising situations and even unforeseen anti-climaxes.

A STRANGER LOOKS AT BELLEVILLE

We who live in Belleville are inclined to pass by those things which contribute to the beauty of our fair city and grumble because of what we may regard as disadvantages. But a new pride and contentment comes when a stranger looks upon us and sees many things to admire.

Recently a Canadian gentleman of Scottish descent found himself for three days in Belleville with business temporarily laid aside. His inherent frugality rebelled at a waste of time so he devoted himself to an intensive study of the community. We felt fortunate to have received the full measure of his observations.

Here is the gist of his remarks:

"I like the architecture of your City Hall—it is reminiscent of the Cloth Hall at Ypres—but I don't like the odd shack occasionally seen in the city.

"I like the way in which your city plies its trade in intimacy with the river—though people tell me at times the river becomes too intimate with the business places."

"I like your fine, wide residential streets with their beautiful old trees and the spacious grounds of the homes."

"I like your churches and educational institutions. They are all housed in substantial structures, and reveal that spiritual matters have a strong place in the community, and that your children will go forth well equipped for the 'battle of life."

"I like the close relationship apparent between town and country, with a strong market."

"I like the frequent references to and pride in cheese, and I also like the flavor of the product.'"

"I like the friendly intercourse between people on the streets which reached out even to me, a stranger, in cheerful 'good mornings.'"

MERE 'SOUND AND FURY'

Chancellor Hitler's speech last week gave the world a fair idea if such were necessary of the demagogue he is. The man who invaded Poland and whose action launched the war, sees himself as the divinely-led German who is protected by Providence from bombs, and who will lead the Germans to victory.

This is mere demagoguery, mere playing to the notion of divine right which is one of the means Hitler has used to impress himself on the German nation. The other weapon he uses is the use of force to crush his own people and make them a nation of automatons, all bearing the Hitler hallmark.

Hitler lauded himself and the German leaders of today as superior to the German leaders in 1914. A man at Doorn, an exile from Potsdam, could reply bitterly to that, for the Germany of 1914 was potent, it was led by outstanding military leaders, and yet it lost the war. Today on the scene is a man who may have impressed himself on the Germans but who has not the love and devotion shown by the Germans of a quarter of a century ago. To many of the older people Hitler must still be the upstart, especially to the army clique.

Hitler's speech was typical of the run of his past speeches. It was "sound and fury signifying nothing" new.

THE PLANETS IN THE SOUTHWEST

Whether the winter season will permit many nights of observation of the great natural phenomenon, the appearance of five great planets of the solar system in a majestic grouping in the southwestern sky in the evenings, those who have seen Jupiter, Mars, Saturn, Venus and Mercury lined up as they are at this time, have seen one of the marvels of the heavens. Of peculiar interest of course is this appearance as these are the only visible sister heavenly bodies of the earth. There are other planets of our solar system which are visible only by means of the telescope.

Winter season is blessed with a galaxy of beauty in the sky and is a good time to start to learn something of the mysteries of the heavens. Winter brings the great constellation of Orion and that pearl-rope of stars known as the Pleiades, so often mentioned in the writings of the ancients including the writers of the Bible. But this winter offers the best start at a knowledge of astronomy as the most prominent grouping in the sky at present is not even the majestic beauty of Orion or of the Pleiades. It is the fleeting grouping of the planets, the kin folk of the earth. It is not difficult to spot the planet display in the southwest.

Today few people would think of trembling at the sight of the planets in such a grouping but in another age it actually did terrify even great military leaders. One of these dictators of old was Genghis Khan, the scourge of Asia. When he saw a planetary manifestation he forecast his own death by what he saw in the planets.

In the world of today Hitler is said to be surrounded by astrologists. He can find the planet Mars named for the heathen god of war. Man has often heard of the red planet as a symbol of war on earth. But science accepts none of this for it rates Mars and the other planets according to the laws of nature and not according to the strange beliefs of man.

Venus is the clouded planet, the evening or morning star, a body of almost the same size as the earth but which because of its comparative proximity to the earth in the morning or evening appears so large. The surface of the planet can not be seen through the veil of vapor or mist. Saturn, the most beautiful of the planets through the telescope, is so far away at this time that it appears as but a feeble light. It is nearly a billion miles away. Mercury, named after the ancient god of speed, is but 82,000,000 miles away.

Of the fixed stars so far away that their relative place in the heavens never appears to change through the years much is known. But more is known of the planets or "wanderers" as they are called. Here if anywhere there might be life as man knows it. But even in the planets is little opportunity of life so scientists believe. There may be life on Venus, some admit, but the general opinion is opposed to this view. Even Mars itself, long thought possibly inhabited, is now said to have reached the stage of age, a cold planet, where no life can live. So the people of earth who look upon the planets can think that there is no one looking back from the planets at them. These "wanderers" follow their courses in nature's way and only on earth is there such a development as animal life, intellectual life and such a thing as spirit.

As men of old looked up to these planets it is not to be wondered at that they saw in them the work of the Creator making all things for man's benefit. If it were not for man in this vast cosmos of things, nothing that is could have seen or pondered on these works of the hand of the Deity but the stars and the planets following their own courses, not of their own will but in obedience to natural law, the law of attraction, and the law of chemistry. Since man is so blessed that he is not as the rocks it is no wonder that he was taught reverence for the Creative Being because of what he himself is and may be and because of what he has seen of the might and power and the glory of Deity.

Taking Tablets of Cold Vaccine to Avoid Colds

Most physicians have had the experience of trying out a new drug or other new method of treatment on three or four patients and have been greatly pleased with the results. Just as they are beginning to believe the drug or method to be very effective, they find that on the next three or four cases the results are disappointing. About this time the physician may think he was too enthusiastic about the benefits of the treatment in his first few cases, and then he again finds that it greatly benefits his next group of cases. All of which proves that the drug or method has some merit even if not as much as he had hoped at first.

This experience has been common in the treatment of colds by injections of cold vaccines. Some physicians have reported satisfactory results in 60 to 70 per cent of their cases and others as low as only 10 per cent.

An interesting experiment where the cold vaccines were given by mouth is reported in the Canadian Medical Association Journal by Dr. Walter W. Read, Medical Director, Northern Electric Company Limited, Montreal.

"We selected 50 employees (25 men and 25 women) who had a record on our files of being subject to mild and severe colds every winter for the past five years. As a check we took 50 other members of the staff who agreed to take no cold preventive treatment. This latter group were chosen to correspond closely in age, type of work, home conditions, to the fifty who were taking the tablets. Both groups reported once a week to the Medical Department from October to end of April."

Of the 50 who took the treatment, 15 or 30 per cent. had no colds at all, 17 or 34 per cent. had mild colds with no lost time from work; 18 or 36 per cent had colds with lost time from work. They had about 66 days' lost time or 3 1-2 days per person per cold.

What about the 50 employees who did not take the cold vaccine or other preventive treatment?

Of the 50 who took no precautions against colds 10, or 20 percent had no colds at all; 24 or 48 per cent had colds but lost no time from work; 16 or 32 per cent had colds with loss of time totalling 106 days or an average of 6 3-4 days per person per cold.

The above results show that there was an improvement in the health record of those taking tablets. There were no severe reactions to the cold tablets—nausea, vomiting, hives.

A Man Whose Hobby is Getting His Hair Cut

Gordon Cooper has an unusual hobby: he collects haircuts. He claims to have had his hair cut at least a thousand times, and he never misses an opportunity of a haircut that will give him a new experience.

"My most expensive haircut was one I had recently in London", he told listeners. "I wanted to see how much a haircut could cost. It was accompanied by a face massage, singe, shave, friction massage and a few things which are now an expensive memory. I left the palatial establishment with something to prevent your hair falling out, sir, and 36s. 3d. less in my pocket.

"Another expensive haircut I had was one in Moscow. It was the city's best saloon, but the conditions were unpleasant and the cutting bad. The price was 6s. at the then rate of exchange, and although tips are supposed to be abolished, a hand appeared to receive a further 1s. 6d. The wireless boomed the whole time, and I was forced to gaze upon the faces of Lenin, Marx and Stalin posted up directly in front of the chair.

"Italy, I think, is the real paradise of barbers. Every third shop seems to be devoted to haircutting and shaves, for even the poorest Italian likes to be shaved professionally.

"I remember one very interesting haircut I once had in the barber's chair at the strange mediaeval town of Modica in Sicily. There was apparently no minimum age for barbers, and I was fascinated to see children on boxes wielding razors on customers who evidently put great faith in youth. I decided to have my hair cut and entered one of the shops where I was attended to by a most attractive six-year-old child. He did remarkably well, and when I asked him, 'How much?' I could see he felt what it was like to be a potential millionaire, for foreigners in Modica are all supposed to be rich. The child thought seriously for a minute of the largest sum he could imagine, and then said, "Ten lire". This is about 2s. When I gasped, "What!" he immediately realized diplomatically he had made an economic miscalculation, and came down to half the original figure. He asked 'Five lire'— which was just five times what the average Sicilian pays.

"The only place where I have ever been offered beer with my haircut was in Tokyo where the cost was 2d., and a pretty little Japanese serving-girl brought beer. Not so pleasant was a haircut I had in Bangkok in Siam during a revolution some years ago. Not more than two people were allowed in the saloon at the same time so that there should be no plotting, and a soldier was present armed with his rifle.

"I have had my hair cut while sitting in a chair that straddled the Equator, and I have had my hair cut by a man who claimed he had trimmed the locks of Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Winston Churchill. Either he was an empty boaster or there was no transmission of greatness through the laying on of hands."—From the London Listener.

GERMAN SUBMARINE DESTROYED BY FRENCH

Paris, Feb. 28.— (CP-Havas) — The 1,458-ton French destroyer Simoun destroyed a German submarine off Cape Finistere, it was disclosed here last night.

According to official estimates, the French had previously sunk at least 15 U-boats up to February 16. Ten of these were attacked last year and the remainder between mid-January and February 16. Within the past two weeks British naval and air forces were estimated to have accounted for seven more.

Normandie Like Ghost Ship With Furnishings Stored; One of 4 Engines Always Kept Under Steam

The Normandie stands in the water, as motionless as if she were set in concrete, huge and a little tattered where the weather has chewed at her paint. A hundred feet away the walls of the Queen Mary rise up, but somehow the Queen Mary does not seem quite so vast. Perhaps that is because they have painted the Queen Mary gray, all of a single tone, while the Normandie still wears her peacetime dress: black hull and white superstructure and red funnels. The Queen Mary was painted over while her people still played with the idea of moving her across the sea and home. The Frenchmen knew from the first that they would not try to sail their ship. They knew she was tucked in for as long as the war might last. Tucked in she is, dozing out the months like some fabulous hibernating bear, her mighty energies calmed to a slow almost imperceptible beat.

Under Police Guard

When I visited her at her pier the other day, I saw two city policemen lounging at the pier entrance and two private policemen at the foot of the gangway, writes Morris Markey in the New Yorker Magazine. And that was all I suppose that I should never have got past the first sentries if I had been alone. However, an official of the company was taking me aboard and the policeman recognized him. The gangway was slung out as it used to be in gayer and certainly more seemly times, but there was no junior officer trained in grace to welcome us over the side. Instead at the end of the gangplank, we came to a small white door in an otherwise boarded-up sideport. The company official knocked and a peep panel slid open. The square, expressionless face of a deckhand stared at us. The official showed him a printed card with a photograph attached, and the deckhand let us in.

It was a weird place we entered, I can tell you that: corridors of silence and of gloomy half-light, swathes of gray-white cloth covering the walls and lengths of taut canvas covering the floors. As we walked along, my companion said, "Not too cheering, is it?" We reached the purser's office, where I was to ask the questions and note the answers, and I was introduced to him, a quiet, smiling, weary-looking man. He explained apologetically that a certain amount of secrecy was necessary, but he would try to answer as many of my questions as possible. He made us comfortable: a cigaret and a glass of wine....

Equipment Packed

The first task of putting the Normandie up in harbor, the purser said, had been to pack away the ship's equipment. It was like closing up some mammoth country house for the winter. Silverware wroth more than $150,000 was stowed in small wooden boxes and packed in a fireproof vault below decks. Blankets worth $30,000 were folded away in four tons of mothballs. China and rugs, linen and draperies were stored in airtight rooms about the ship. Every chair, every lamp, every table had to have a cover, but these were already at hand, normal equipment for periods when the ship was tied up in drydock for repairs.

Then came the greater job of securing the vessel herself against the ravages of idleness, for idleness is more destructive than use to a ship. Sixty million dollars' worth of hull and machinery, plumbing, and woodwork had to be safeguarded. Every bright-metal part on the ship was covered with heavy grease. Every painted metal part was given two or three fresh coats. The job of greasing and painting is kept up every day, as men go over the ship from stern to bow, over and over and over in an endless routine.

When twelve hundred members of the Normandie's crew were shipped back to France shortly after the war began, a hundred and fifteen others stayed behind. Among them were the captain and a mate, the chief engineer and a purser, and assorted oilers, deckhands, stewards, cooks, electricians and firemen. (These figures are approximate also for the Queen Mary. The proportion is the same for the Ile-de-France, which lies at Staten Island). The skeleton crew has been put on what amounts to a sea-voyage basis rather than an import basis; two-thirds of the men are on duty at all times, and one-third at liberty in town.

Two Vital Duties

The two vital duties of the crew are to keep the engines going and to guard against fire. Marine engines deteriorate quickly unless they are used. One of the ship's four propulsion engines is under steam all the time. The engines are run in rotation, each working about four weeks at time. In addition, a number of large and small service engines are kept going to generate power for lighting and heat, for the ventilating system (which now operates only in the sections of the ship used by the crew), and for the fire-control signal system. Standing at her pier, the Normandie is burning about 9,000 barrels of oil a month. The great propulsion enginers are run very slowly. The big screws must be turned over to prevent their bearings from getting too tight. If they were turned too fast they would churn up filth from the bottom of the river and perhaps cause damage to small boats by the violent cross-currents set up.

The fire-alarm system operates precisely as if the ship were at sea. A monitor, on a four-hour watch, sits in a control room. Before him are illuminated panels. In every cabin, in every corner of the public rooms and the kitchens, in the engine room and the hold, there are instruments which detect any rise in temperature or any smoke and automatically transmit a signal to the monitor's panels, telling him exactly where the fire is. Besides, twenty firemen patrol the ship all the time on regular beats. Each of them must signal his whereabouts to the monitor at twenty-minute intervals. All cabin doors are kept wide open, partly to make it easier to get at a possible fire and partly to prevent mustiness.

I asked about the effects of damp air on the ship's interior and furnishings, and learned to my surprise that the air of New York Harbor is not excessively damp at all. It is, on the contrary, very dry. Wet rags are used regularly throughout the ship to preserve humidity. The hardwood dance floors have been covered with water-soaked strips of cloth. Tapestries and paintings remain in place, as do ornamental lighting fixtures and other decorative objects. The hot, dry days of summer will be the worst period for all of these things.

Emptiness and Silence

The emptiness and silence of the big ship are depressing. On a tour with the purser, we walked up and down haunted stairways with their dim bulbs casting deep shadows. We walked through hushed corridors lit by half-shuttered portholes. We looked into the magnificent public rooms, abandoned and futile. The atmosphere of loneliness hung heaviest of all, I think, in the great dining room. Ghost chairs stood at ghost tables and a weird light came through the stained-glass windows.

The purser smiled. "Did you ever read the books of Rider Haggard?" he asked. "Well, this is like one of those queer rooms in his jungle palaces." The description was not perfect, but it was on the right track.

In the crew's quarters, just off a kitchen, the midday meal was about to be served. There was something pathetic and absurd about the sight of the cooks at work at one tiny section of three long banks of ranges. The meal they were making smelled good. On the tables where the men were seated waiting there were the bottles of wine without which a Frenchman could not survive.

I talked to a few of the men. They would rather be home. Yes, it was a soft berth if you thought of the army. It was better than being shot at. But then, home was home. They are bored here. They having moving pictures almost every night. They have cards and tobacco. Many of them are learning English by means of Linguaphone records. However, their homesickness is becoming acute, and the government now plans to bring over a relief crew from France in the spring.

I asked the purser about the costs of maintaining a ship in harbor. I mentioned the Columbus which the Germans had tried to run home from Vera Cruz and, failing, had scuttled, saying I heard that the Germans simply had to run for it or lose their ship in debts they could not pay, because the people down there were gouging the last penny out of them for harbor fees. The purser observed that if that was true the Germans would be forced to do more of such running for it.

Seagoing insurance has of course been dropped and there is no necessity to carry war-risk insurance for a ship tied up in a neutral country. Still, all costs charged against the idle ship run to nearly a million dollars a year, not counting the interest on an idle investment. These include pier rental, upkeep and fire insurance.

DUTCH BATTERIES FIRE ON PLANES

For More Than Five Hours Intermittent Guns Blaze at Unidentified Craft

Amsterdam, Feb. 28 (AP)—Netherlands anti-aircraft batteries fired during the night on foreign aircraft which flew too high to be identified.

For more than five hours, ending at 3 a.m., Amsterdam batteries blazed away intermittently at the unwelcome visitors, as they had done also on Monday and Saturday nights. It was not disclosed whether any hits were scored.

For the second time, an unexploded shell ripped through a house from garret to cellar. Last Saturday, a schoolhouse in the heart of the city was damaged; today, a three - inch projectile crashed through three floors of a residence near the beds of sleeping residents.

(The German News Agency claimed "German observers" had established "beyond the possibility of mistake" that British planes were flying over the Netherlands to and from Germany.

(In London the Air Ministry declined comment on this German charge. In unofficial circles, however, it was recalled that Netherlands protests in Berlin against German flights over the Netherlands have been frequent, while only on one or two occasions was a protest been lodged in London.

(Only a week ago a German plane went so far as to fire on a Netherlands plane which had tried to intercept it over Netherlands territory.)

Daily War Survey

By The Canadian Press

Artillery, infantry patrols and air forces are becoming more active as weather improves but so far fall short of a definite indication either the Allies or Germany are about to launch the often-discussed spring offensive in the west.

Naturally, as weather becomes suitable for an offensive, the need for eternal vigilance becomes greater and this may explain the extended flights made recently by the German air force over France and the British over Germany.

The visit of Sumner Welles, United States Under-Secretary of State to the capitals of European nations on a secret mission for President Roosevelt may be a factor in delaying large offensive operations if such were contemplated.

However slim the prospects of peace may be, it is unlikely the Nazi regime would wish to further offend American public opinion by complicating the situation further until it has heard what Mr. Welles may have to say and delivered to him whatever message it thinks may put the German position in the most favorable light.

There is no official warrant for the belief Mr. Welles has any peace proposals to lay before the belligerents but the wishes of the United States Government with regard to the termination of the war are well known.

Any extension of present operations whether successful or unsuccessful could not fail to further becloud whatever dim prospect of peaceful settlement Mr. Roosevelt and his advisers may be able to discern. For this reason an initiative, particularly one on the part of Germany which started hostilities by an act which shocked American public opinion, the invasion of Poland, would not be regarded as a gesture of either friendship or respect towards the United States.

If as Adolf Hitler indicated in his speech on Saturday, Germany insists on a free hand in Europe east of the Rhine, American intervention in the way of suggestions from Mr. Welles may not be welcome but American intervention with armed force would be still less welcome and the Nazis are unlikely to take any step to bring it about.

The bravery and enthusiasm of the Australians and New Zealanders in the ill-fated Gallipoli campaign of the world war was recalled by the zest shown by the Australians drilling for war service at Holsworthy camp near Sydney, New South Wales. The soldiers are stripped to the waist to feed the 18-pounders. The gun is in full recoil immediately after the shell has left the barrel.

LIBERAL LEADERS CARRY FIGHT TO

In the meantime, government campaigners ranged into the west. Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Justice Minister Lapointe spoke in Winnipeg last night and presented the government's case for re-election to the voters of Manitoba, where the government held 13 of the 17 seats, when parliament dissolved. Tomorrow the Prime Minister speaks at Prince Albert, Sask., in which province the Liberals held 15 of 21 seats. Conservative Leader Manion speaks at Sault Ste. Marie Ont. tonight.

Have Grasp of Affairs

Mr. Mackenzie King said his government has the experience and grasp of Canada's problems which it would take a new administration a long time to acquire. He declared that the Liberals are appealing for support to carry on the war effort because they think it will be in the interest of Canadians and not merely because they want power.

It was the Prime Minister's first platform speech of the campaign and he discussed the sudden dissolution of parliament and defence expenditures. Mr. Lapointe recalled the Liberal victory in the Quebec provincial election last fall and said he was going through every province to preach the same doctrine that brought victory in Quebec.

The government continued to press the campaign and far outnumber opposition speakers. Three other cabinet ministers spoke while M. A. MacPherson of Regina spoke at Toronto and Wingham, Ont., for the Conservatives and M. J. Coldwell, National Chairman of the Cooperativef Commonwealth Federation, spoke at Edmonton, where the new democracy movement announced its election platform.

Speaks on Economic Aspect

Mr. MacPherson, runner-up for the National Conservative Party leadership, spoke on the economic aspects of the war in his Wingham address. He criticized the King government for shipping wheat before the freeze up across to the American ports.

"This Canadian money was sent to the United States for the time that the wheat was locked up in the United States ports," he said.

"In 1935, when Bennett was in power, a seven foot binder in the West was worth $256," he said. "When Mackenzie King went in, the binders went up to $259 and they have increased steadily until this year, they are worth $319. That is the result of the tariff reductions of which the King regime talked so much about."

He criticized the indefinite attitude of the government before war broke out. "Hitler could tell from the laxity of the government that Canada would be in no position to go to war. If anything, this helped him to push his war effort".

Never Received Answer

He said Premier King's efforts in regard to war before Sept. 1, consisted of a telegram which he sent to Hitler asking him not to declare war. He didn't even receive an answer to it."

He charged Premier King of deliberately falsifying the records of Parliament. "On the day that Parliament was scuttled," he said, "69 questions in regard to the war effort were sent down to parliament. When the votes and proceedings were printed, there was no mention made of the 69 questions. What became of them; I say that there is a definite sign of parliamentary records being falsified when there was no sign of these questions.

Only Courtesy Practice

Dr. Arthur Beauchesne, clerk of the House of Commons, said at Ottawa that Conservative notices of motion and questions were left off the votes and proceedings of the four-hour session of parliament last Jan. 25 by officers of the House.

"The matter was dealt with by the officer of the house as a question of regular procedure," he said. Ordinarily, in recent years, such notices, which have been sent to House officials before parliament opened, have been published in the votes and proceedings of the first day's sitting, but this is a "courtesy practice," and was not followed on this occasion."

In his Toronto address Mr. MacPherson charged that the Canadian Government had forced a British admiral to move from an office on Canadian soil to a yacht in an eastern Canadian harbor. The admiral was forced to do his essential work from the yacht, he said. Mr. MacPherson gave no details.

Navy Praised

"While we may be a separate nation and have a measure of autonomy we didn't have 25 to 30 years ago, everything we've got, including our liberties and our freedom, first and last, is just what the British navy has been able to do for us, and protect us and nothing more," Mr. MacPherson said.

He said that a national government as propounded by Conservative leader Manion is "looming as a question of major importance" in Canada. The fact that Prime Minister Mackenzie King was appointing "so many Conservatives to key positions, but not in the cabinet, is the strongest argument for national government."

Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Transport, in an address at Cornwall, said Canada's war effort is being prosecuted without "a suggestion of graft, favoritism or other usual by-products of war buying."

All Purchases of High Standard

"Nothing is purchased which is not of high standard," said Mr. Howe. "The widest opportunity is given to anyone to tender on war contracts and these tenders are carefully considered with a view to the firm's ability to produce the quantity and quality required within the necessary time limit."

Canada's fighting men are selected carefully on their merits alone. Referring to the Army Cooperation Air Squadron landed in England this week, the Minister said the men of this unit had been "chosen carefully by professional soldiers and not by politicians."

"No man can join the army unless he joins through the front door at the recruiting office," Mr. Howe said. Canada's soldiers are the best paid in the Empire.

The Minister lauded the efficiency of Canada's railways in handling without difficulty 40 per cent more traffic since war broke out. Canada is the only country participating in the war "with adequate facilities in its harbors and railways."

80,000 Saw No Service

Postmaster General Power in an address at Victoria spoke of the present recruiting situation in Canada and said that thousands of physically unfit men had been enlisted in the last war and 80,000 men had been sent to England who saw no service.

"Of 260 infantry battalions sent to England in the last war, only one quarter were sent to the front," said Mr. Power. "We had units outfitted by private individuals to enhance their own prestige. From that lesson we profited. We made each military district see to its own requirements. We had to be fair to all and required adequate examination as to fitness before enlisting a man. Another examination also will be made on a soldier's or sailor's discharge in order to protect him in the matter of a pension.

Mr. Power referred to Conservative Leader R. J. Manion's proposed national government and asked who Dr. Manion would put in as ministers. Most people knew that an all-star team had little chance against a smooth-working team.

"I doubt even if the Hepburn-Drew-Duplessis combination would be capable of carrying on," he added.

Dr. H. A. Bruce Nominated

Dr. Herbert A. Bruce, former Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, was acclaimed National Government candidate in Toronto Parkdale constituency.

Dr. Bruce's speech of acceptance, a brief for a National Government, was climaxed by an attack on Prime Minister Mackenzie King for "torpedoing" and "scuttling" parliament. He charged Mr. King with raising the conscription issue in his first radio address of the campaign.

Had Mr. King formed a National Government there would have been a firm and united Canada behind him, said Mr. Bruce.

"The simple fact remains that he refused to abandon party politics in the National interest," Dr. Bruce continued. "He puts forth a rather feeble claim, that his government is National because there are representatives from all the provinces of Canada. This is sheer nonsense if any attention is paid to the vote and the constitutional structure."

The government which Mr. King claimed to be National was in office by 46.7 per cent of the votes in the 1935 Federal election.

"No claim whatover can be justified which aims at deluding the people into a belief that a united Canada is reflected in 46 per cent Liberal votes."

Not Liberal Victory is Claim

The Quebec provincial election was a victory over an anti-British government, said Dr. Bruce. It was not a Liberal victory. An insult to the loyalty of French Canadians could be read "into Mr. King's statement that French-Canada will desert the cause of liberty if he is not re-elected."

No place in Canada was recruiting so active as in Quebec.

"For Mr. King to insinuate, as he did in his first radio address, that under any other government but his there was fear of conscription was a statement very unworthy and does not reflect credit on the position which he now occupies. Enemy propaganda would have to be very vicious and remote from the truth to measure up to the quality of Mr. King's statement regarding conscription. The belief is general that conscription will not be an issue in this war as recruiting progresses at a rate greatly in excess of the demands which are made from time to time."

117 Aircraft Delivered

The Conservatives never provided adequate equipment for the Royal Canadian Air Force while the Liberal government added to its effective aircraft and made it possible to equip the force with first-class advanced training planes Defence Minister Rogers said at Eganville, Ont.

Since the outbreak of war 117 aircraft have been delivered to the R.C.A.F., 67 are on order to be delivered shortly "and many times that number are at present under negotiation by the War Supply Board," he said.

In 1935 the air force had 154 machines, including 28 service aircraft and 62 elementary training planes. The remaining 64 were planes suitable for transport and general duty but there were at that time no planes whatever that could be classified as intermediate or advanced training types.

The R.C.A.F. had 259 aircraft on Sept. 1, 1939, including 107 service machines, 65 elementary trainers, 44 general duty and 43 advanced trainers.

Replies to Manion

Mr. Rogers replied to Conservative leader Manion's declaration that the government spent $188,000,000 supposedly on defence, from 1935 to the outbreak of war, "yet preparation for the almost inevitable war was shamefully neglected."

"The actual facts are these," the minister continued. "From Nov. 1, 1935, until March 31, 1936, there was spent on national defence a little less than the balance of the previous year's appropriation. To this has been added the amounts actually expended on defence in the fiscal years since then right up to Aug. 31, 1939. Instead of being $188,000,000 as Dr. Manion says, the total is $112,764,449.

"More money has of course been spent since the first of last September, but Mr. Manion referred specifically to the time between 1935 and the outbreak of war. He is wrong, therefore, by the enormous figure of $75,000,000."

Nationalize Industries Advocated

Canada's war industries should be nationalized at once and "profitable patriotism must be stopped whilst men bleed and die," M. S. Coldwell, National Chairman of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, said at Edmonton.

Charging the Dominion Government with adopting a policy of "drift and neglect" regarding agriculture and unemployment, the C.C.F. National Chairman said the Federal administration had betrayed the west by its wheat policy.

Mr. Coldwell said profiteering by war industries must be prevented. Following the 'Bren gun scandal," he added, Parliament had limited profits on contracts let without tender to five per cent. But Parliament was forced to abandon this provision.

Transport Minister Howe explained that in spite of the government's appeal to the patriotism of manufacturers, they had not succeeded in letting a single contract on that basis, Mr. Coldwell stated.

"This was the most successful sit-down strike ever staged in Canada," he continued. Now there was no limit to war profits, only an excess profits tax of 3.2 per cent on a 10 per cent profit.

Contrasting the attitude of the Liberal Government toward agriculture and industry, Mr. Coldwell said that "in January an outcry had been raised against the export of 1,000,000 bushels of wheat to Russia," but in the same month the Dominion administration had authorized export of 13 carloads of nickel and one of scrap iron to Japan.

It was the grave responsibility of government to initiate measures which meant the sacrifice of Canadian lives. No man would seek that responsibility except as a high patriotic duty.

"Who will say what we will see before this terrible period is over?" the Prime Minister asked. "Your individual and personal fate will be at stake in the next few years.

Many Demands to be Made

"No person here will find himself in the fortunate position two years hence, that he is in tonight, unless I am greatly mistaken.

"Demands are going to be made upon us, the like of which we have never known. The world today demands experienced men to administer the affairs of every country. For that reason and that alone we are asking you to support us at the present time."

To the Conservative party and those who might wish to support it the Prime Minister said they had the right to know what men Conservative Leader Manion planned to put in his proposed national government, and what policies would be initiated.

The Prime Minister also had a message for the Social Credit and Co-operative Commonwealth Federation parties. "There are times, undoubtedly, when economic questions should be discussed and when we might have opportunity to experiment with financial reforms," he said. "But that time is not a time of war such as the present."

Leaves for Prince Albert

At the present time, when it was impossible to borrow from the United States or from Great Britain it was most essential that Canada's monetary and financial situation be kept sound and undisturbed.

Mr. Mackenzie King left this morning for Prince Albert where on Thursday he will be chosen as candidate in that riding which he has represented for fifteen years. Immediately after the meeting he will return to Ottawa.

The Prime Minister's address at the civil auditorium last night was preceded by an address by Justice Minister Lapointe who came to Winnipeg by air and will speak in each of the provincial capitals.

Mr. Lapointe said he did not believe Dr. Manion could form a government as efficient as that which has administered Canada during the last five years.

Secret Information Held

Speaking of criticism directed at the defence of Canada regulations Mr. Lapointe said the government needed such powers in order to protect Canada's war effort from sabotage and to protect the very people themselves. He had secret information of organizations and enemy agents being instructed to get into the army and obtain citizenship in order to harm the country and hamper its war effort.

Mr. Mackenzie King described the growth of Canada's defence forces in all three branches, navy, army and air, since his government took office. He scored the last Conservative administration for "butchering" the air force and neglecting defences.

He defied Dr. Manion to find any proof of his charge that the British Government had been refused when it first requested an opportunity to train airmen in Canada.

Made For Purpose

Those charges had been made the first of July, 1938, the Prime Minister said, and he doubted if they would have been made at that time but for the fact a national Conservative convention was to be held in a few days.

Recalling the burdens of responsibility borne by his government and himself in the past four years the Prime Minister said nothing had been so hard to carry as his inability to speak frankly to his followers and the people about what was happening in the world without arousing undue alarm.

Glad to Meet Friends

It had been a relief to him when the crisis came at last and the decision of peace or war could be presented to parliament.

It had been a "privation" too when the sequence of critical events in Europe had made it impossible for him to travel across Canada and meet personally the friends he had made in a period of 40 years of public life.

It had been a bitter responsibility to be faced with the task of recommending steps which would involve the sacrifice of Canadian lives. He had not felt that responsibility so heavy as when, last night he faced a great audience of men and women.

"The future, as I see it, is a very, very dark and terrible one," Mr. Mackenzie King said. "I ask any one of you—would you wish to carry the responsibility which is mine as leader of the government today, having to pass daily on questions of life and death.

"I see a situation ahead of us which may last, possibly, for many years to come. All that has happened since September his served to increase rather than lessen our apprehension.

"If we appeal to you now to give us your support so that we may carry on the war effort, we do it because we think it is in your interests and not merely because we want power. We are doing it as a high patriotic duty."

A Long Task

It would be difficult and a long task for a new government to obtain the grasp of problems and to establish the relations with foreign governments now possessed by the present administration.

Not only would the government be faced with the task of conducting a long war but it might well be called upon to assist in making a peace. The Prime Minister believed Mr. Lapointe and himself, whose views on peace and maintenance of goodwill among nations were well known, could speak with the voice of the whole Canadian people at a peace conference.

Mr. Mackenzie King said he had dissolved parliament because of the resolution of censure passed by the Ontario Legislature a week before Parliament opened, and because of the attitude immediately taken by Conservative Leader Manion when the Speech from the Throne indicated there would be an immediate appeal to the people.

No Joy to Me

"Don't think it was my joy to me to ask my local friends to come to Ottawa looking forward to receiving their sessional indemnity only to be told there would be no session and no indemnity", the Prime Minister said.

The Ontario Legislature vote and the attacks that would be made in parliament which he said, would give Canada's allies and enemy a false impression, made it impossible to hold a session.

"We had no right then to think of ourselves or our friends but of the effect it would have on ur war effort if we adopted any other course of action".

Some Advocate Expeditionary Force

Meanwhile a movement for still more al dto the embattled Scandinavian nation gained momentum with some suggesting that an expeditionary force be sent.

Talk of such an expedition has been inspired by contention that the aid already given Finland is not sufficient to turn the tide of war agains tthe Red Army. Leslie Hore-Belisha, former War Secretary, and Commander Oliver Locker-Lampson, Conservative Member of Parliament, are among those who recently have urged large-scale assistance.

As envisaged by proponents, an expeditionary force would give the Finns relief in the form of trained manpower an dat the same time strike at Russia, thus stalling any Soviet economic assistance to blockaded Germany. The reasoning here is that Russia would have few supplies to spare once she were matched against a well-armed and numerically strong foe.

Finnish War's Duration

With the western front still practically static, the Allies are said to be turning to a broad concept of strategy. Finland and the middle east are looked upon by the highest military and naval authorities as potential fields for flanking attacks on Russia and Germany.

It is noteworthy that despite recent Finnish reverses circles close to the British Foreign Office believe the war in Finland will be of 'considerable duration."

Locker-Lampson

Quarters which say an expeditionary force is under consideration ad dthat the temper of the British people calls for measures more drastic than the dispatch of war planes, guns and ammuntion, collection of funds for food, clothing and medical supplies and approval of British enlistments for the defence of Finland.

Mr. Locker-Lampson has pointed out what he terms the "imminent periol of Finland's overthrow" and proposed in the House of Commons that the government 'free a substantial force (from the Allied armies) for instant service in Finland."

He introduced a resolution along that line Monday, calling for the allcation of a day to debate on it. Whether the request for debate would be ganted was a question.

Attitude of Scandinavians

Mr. Hore-Belisha, Liberal Member of Parliament, last Friday in a public address called for full intervention by "sea, air and land" on behalf of Finland, saying 'the risk of helping Finland may be great, but the risk of not helping her may be greater."

The neutrality of Scandinavian nations would appear to bar immediate action along expeditionary lines, but one naval man speaks of the 'necessity of anticipating enemy movements."

The Finnish Petsamo region looms large on British Admiralty maps. Experts see it not only as a gateway or Arctic invasion of Finland—its present use—but as a Russian route to Sweden and a potential base for a coastal advance on Norway.

'Educational Night' At Quinte Friendship Chapter Enjoyed

The development of special facilities by the Ontario Department of Education for the instruction of handicapped children was explained by Dr. C. E. Stothers, B.A. D. Paed., Inspector of Auxiliary Classes, at the "Educational Night" gathering of Quinte Friendship Chapter, R.A.M., in the Masonic Hall last evening.

Dr. Stothers, who formerly was Inspector of Schools in Prince Edward County, traced the progress in special instruction to the point, where today there are 418 auxiliary classes and some 2,400 rural school units, many of the latter comprised of a single pupil.

There are, he said, 24 varieties of classes, divided into two main groups—physically and mentally handicapped.

In the physical group was included those with insufficient sense of sight or hearing, and a large number with speech defects. In some instances there were classes in hospitals.

In the mental group there were mayn pupils, who had progressed to a certain point in their education, and then were unable to go forward. They had the ability to learn, but had stopped using it.

Types Enumerated

Dr. Stothers enumerated the types of classes to aid the physically handicapped, which include sight-saving, speech - correction, lip-reading, facilities to aid the hard-of-hearing, and adjustment classes in which the pupil was taken back to the point where he or she had failed and, by new methods, encouraged to advance again.

The latest effort had been towards the habilitation of cripples with instruction directed towards teaching them useful trades.

The value of auxiliary education had been abundantly proven, Dr. Stothers declared, and had brought about a new understanding of those pupils who formerly had suffered derision because of their handicaps.

"Educational Night" proved an unique event with the officers of the degree team comprised of teachers or ex-teachers. Music of the degree and for the social period afterwards was supplied by the Belleville Public Schools Band under the direction of Mr. Alfred Cooper, instructor in band music for all Belleville schools.

Readings were given by Miss Mildred Lloyd, instructress of elocution and auditorium, and vocal solos by Miss Phyllis May, musical instructress of Belleville Public Schools. A cornet solo was rendered by S. Wiggins of the Boys' Band.

The guest speaker was introduced by Mr. H. J. Clarke, B.A., and the thanks of the gathering was expressed by Mr. J. O. Herity. The master of Quinte Friendship Chapter, Mr. J. E. Bateman, was the presiding officer. There was a large attendance of both members and guests, many coming from distant points.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Are You a Wilful Worrier?

Are you getting pouches under your eyes, and crows' feet around them, worrying? Take heart, for the things you fret and fume over seldom come to pass. It's the unexpected that happens, as Disraeli said.

Poets and prophets have inveighed against the futility of worrying in a variety of ways, which would take too much space to quote. But reduced to bone and marrow, the substance is the thing you agonize over seldm happens.

But suppose it does happen—worrying isn't going to help. On the contrary, you're going to open up all sorts of calamity channels in advance. Instead, try breaking up all your old worry records. Throw them out as you did the cracked gramophone records last time you had a housecleaning

Apart from being the greatest ally and go-getter for the beauty parlor business, worry has no real market value. Two or three days of good self-indulgent worry and a little self-pity on the side will put more lines in your face than a spell of illness and the loss carouse you'll be just where you started, your problems unsolved. The things you fretted over piled high as furniture on a moving day.

I've used the word carouse intentionally, for people who would be horrified at the idea of drinking or doping get almost as much of a kick out of a prolonged worry spree. They seem to feel there is something creditable in stewing and fretting over what might, would, could or should happen to them. ..

The reason for this gente reminder of the futility of fretting is the score of letters from people who have, in their own immediate family circle, a thirty-third degree worrier. He does no good but drives the rest of the family to distraction.

With these worry experts, anything will do. They can agonize over their jobs, the vamp or her companion-piece in mischief, the shiek, and what either of these may do to any member of the family. And with equal gusto, they can worry over health, children, loss of youth, beauty, money—none of which things are restored by worry, but which, by a trouble-making state of mind, are made a bit more certain.

If it's your job you're fretting over, put just that much nerve force into your work, or into looking for a new job, or applying your energies to thinking up new ideas which will land you a better job.

If it's a vamp you're worrying over, don't lose your good looks fretting about her—heavens knows you'll need them! To a wife who has to suffer the ignominy of seeing her husband's love stray to another woman, the best advice is look to your appearance and keen your sense of balance —and above all, don't nag.

If a wife nags and raves against her rival, she has thrown away her last card. The husband feels there's nothing to lose. His wife knows the worst.

But if a woman can keep her head and just a little grain of humor, and the straying of the husband off the domestic reservation is regarded as temporary madness, the chances are he'll come back. The balance of things is in the wife's favor. He's probably made a fool of himself. He's probably spent a lot of money.

If there are children, they make it doubly hard to cut the cables from home—there are a thousand invisible threads to hold him. And my dear sister, please remember worrying won't help, nor a nose red from crying, nor —NAGGING! Look after your personal appearance, have a sense of humor and serve good meals.

What married man in love with a woman other than his wife ever lost his appetite?

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Manners and Meetings

No matter what our point of view is about the aims and membership of the American Youth Congress we must admit, if we are fair-minded and decent-minded people, that the odious performance of the members of that organization in Washington represents a new low in discourtesy.

Because of the blatant churlishness of the majority of the members, the impression that the organization made on Washington and, therefore, on the country, was that they are an outrageously impolite group.

For all the courtesies extended to them in Washington, for the honor of being addressed by the President, for the Executive hospitality, they showed not the slightest evidence of appreciation. No one but themselves seemed able to do anything that pleased them.

"Shut up" was their favorite admonition, not only to those who didn't and couldn't agree with them, but to those who were honestly trying to find out about their organization and its doings. Perversely, they cheered when they shouldn't have cheered. What we saw and heard in the movies of President Roosevelt's speech to them showed them sullenly silent when the President made statements that they should have applauded. They booed and hissed and shushed their way through their meetings. They paid no attention to parliamentary procedure, throwing out of the meetings anyone who disagreed with their cocksure proceedings.

This organization is so expert in passing resolutions about other "ideals" that, before their next meeting, it should pass a resolution about decent deportment. And it should impress on its members that the word "civil", particularly in its case, should be regarded in both its meanings (1) "befitting a citizen" and (2) "courteous".

When to Withhold the Rod

Experience and observation convinced me that probably the worst time of all for a parent to punish a child for apparent wrongdoing is when the parent is angry at the child because of the offense. Any angry person is seldom a reasonable person and is often a cruel person, and the punishment meted out by persons out of temper is likely to be overly severe and may be entirely out of order. It is far wiser for the parent to wait until he or she has cooled off and is more disposed to view the offense dispassionately.

Obviously the child who did something it hadn't been instructed was wrong or prohibited, isn't an offender in a class with the child who deliberately flaunts authority or tries to see how much he can get away with. Yet the angry person is not as likely to see the distinction and to make allowances for it as the parent who is calm and is motivated in his disciplinary action solely by a desire to train the child.

This parental habit of getting angry with a child over any repeated misdeed is a weakness that children often play upon. Perhaps many parents have never thought of it, but there are plenty of children who get quite a kick out of being able to make a parent angry, even when they know they will be punished for the provocation. It gives them a feeling of importance and a sort of perverse pleasure.

One case I had to deal with in my practise particularly emphasized this to me. A boy of eight or nine had a father who had some prize chickens of which he was very proud. They boy repeatedly let the chickens out of the pen where they were kept, although each time he did there would be a terrific scene in the home, for the father had a bad temper.

These scenes were provoked so many times that the mother appealed to me. Wouldn't I see what was wrong with Willie that made him so perverse? I asked her to let me know the next time it happened, and a few days later she sent for me. I got there while the father was still venting his rage, and I soon comprehended the significance of these repeated occurrences. For a few minutes they made the boy the centre of attention in the home. The father's relations with his son were not close, and this was about the only way the boy got the undivided interest of his parent. And after these whippings the mother went out of her way to be sympathetic. The rest of the time no one in the home paid any particular attention to the lad.

I doubt if Willie had rationalized in this fashion what made him turn out the chickens. But anyway, he was willing to suffer punishment, "martyrdom", in order to gain a place in the Sun even momentarily.

We have always given the most careful consideration to any disciplinary methods used upon the Dionne Quins. We do not allow ourselves to deal with them when angry or even annoyed. When one misbehaves, the worst punishment imposed is "solitary confinement," in an isolation room. But please don't misunderstand the term: it is in no sense a jail-like cell. It's just a spare room we happen to have at the Nursery in which to take care of any of the Quins who may be ill. The offender is just put off by herself where she can't see her sisters or the adults, and can't be seen. There isn't any chance for her to feed ego on such treatment. She is not an object on whom any adult's personal feelings are being vented. Up to now, this is all we have ever had to do to keep any Quin under control.

Of course, the success of this method isn't due to any absence of animal spirits. It is just because we have always tried to deal with them dispassionately and justly and keep them under control. But don't think they don't try and break through rules and routines, just like all children. Every time we get a new nurse in we have to warn her to be extra careful, because the children will try to put things over her. A recent occurrence is a typical example.

When the children go to bed at night, they are not supposed to talk. If one of them can't sleep, she must lie quiet and let the others sleep. Every time a new nurse shares their sleeping room, they all try and get away with something at bedtime. One night, not long ago, they nearly ran the feet off nurse asking for drinks. Next morning when she unsuspectingly told the other adults about it, they all laughed at her hazing. Next night things were different' There were no drinks after bedtime. The nurse was not angry with the Quins, she simply diplomatically ignored the requests.

IF BABY IS CROSS FIND OUT WHY

HEALTHY BABIES are not cross. Your baby should not be cross. If he is, then something in his little system is "out of order". Probably Baby's Own Tablets can promptly "put it right". Mrs. H——, of Fenelon Falls, had the experience. She writes: "My little girl was irritable, feverish and sometimes sick at her stomach—what a relief it was, after giving her Baby's Own Tablets, to see how much better she was."

No matter how delicate your baby may be, these little sweet-tasting tablets cannot harm him. Easy to take. Promptly effective in clearing up simple fevers, diarrhoea, colds, constipation, simple croup, colic, teething troubles and other minor ills.

Never be without a full box of Baby's Own Tablets. Sickness so often strikes in the night. 25 cents. Money back if you are not satisfied.

THE ASTRAL influences bearing rule on the events of this day indicate a very lively and progressive trend of events, especially in all connected with writings, publicity, correspondence and promotional enterprises. The greatest gain in such connection may be made through group collaboration. in which the obectives are directed toward the common good. All sorts of humane and public-spirited efforts should bring recognition. The young should find happiness.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a lively and progressive year, in which collaboration with group movements and other forward-moving projects should meet with conspicuous success. All pertaining to writings, advertising and intellectual pursuits thrive. Spiritual and community movements also flourish, and the young should prosper and be happy.

A child born on this day may have unusual talents and versatility, attaining ambitions in intellectual or professional channels where originality and creative skill are developed. It may, however, be restive and adventurous, as well as not orthodox in its ideas.

THROW OFF YOUR COAT and show a smart suit. A practical new model is of diagonal checked fabric in smoky pink and deep brown with a blue line running through the weave. The jacket is single-link, has square, unpadded shoulders and large pockets. Skirt is full and flared.

Cruising or at home you'll enjoy a profile brim hat of beige felt with red, green and yellow stitching. It's trimmed with bright blue grosgrain.

The time goes quickly at evening affairs what with dancing and watching smart fashion parades. A delightful dance frock recently shown is of filmy chiffon in a blue-gray embroidered with bands and scrolls of bright pink sequins.

A chill breeze is apt to spring up anywhere. At Palm Beach, one smart woman dons a waistlength coat of white fox, the skins worked in semi-circular design to give an oval shape. Up north, they are showing great coats of white fox, this snowy fur being very much in favor again.

Peasant styles continue popular at resorts. A full gathered skirt, a blouse done in flamboyant print and a matching kerchief headdress is the formula. Moccasins and a big beach bag of crocheted yarn in gay colors are favored accessories.

There's always a welcome for the casual yet well tailored silk frock. A grand model is of silk shantung in medium blue with a white and red falling star design. The skirt is pleated, and the tucked top is on shirtwaist lines.

KNITTED clothes grow prettier by the minute. Suits have evolved from the drab and matronly into chic, young styles. A hip-length, fitted jacket of gray yarn plaided in green, orange and copper, is worn with a plain green knit wool skirt. We aren't over-enthusiastic about the gold and silver and sequin-trimmed sweaters, but there's an evening sweater we do like. It is of white chenille, very form-fitting in a ribbed stitch. It has a deep V neckline in front, at the base of which is an enormous poppy crocheted of red chenille. A green slide fastener simulates the stem of the flower.

TONY

— BY ELIZABETH VERNON —

CHAPTER XIII

A hunting morning. The mist hung white in the hollows. The smell of damp, one could tell, would hang heavy on the air, but in the dining room was a scent of coffee, of warm rolls, of bacon; and under the high chimney-piece a fire blazed. Tony stood at the sideboard helping herself to coffee. Very slim, she was, in the old tweed jacket she had slipped on for breakfast, the stone colored breeches and the gleaming boots. Alan surveyed her from the door. He did not care for women who hunted astride but somehow, he acknowledged, one could imagine Tony in no other kit. "Good morning", he said.

She turned. 'Good morning." Her smile was gentle, of the greatest sweetness. "It's a good scenting day," she said in her serious clear voice.

"We'll hope so. Two eggs, Tony, on a hunting morning?"

"Yes, please."

Why should it seem to him touching—the way in which she stood, holding out her plate in both hands? It was as if she begged for a little charity, a little fondness from someone—

She went to her place at the table. And presently there came the sound of a light, booted tread that heralded the arrival of his love.

For a moment she stood in the doorway. Lovely, she was—the snowy frock, formal and decorative, at her throat, the black habit showing off her perfect figure; the black hair caught in a thick, coarse net. Her glance, so darkly bright went from Alan to Tony.

He had risen. Tony rose too. Standing, she drank off a half cup of coffee. Then, with a kind of unobtrusive swiftness, she had crossed to the door and closed it behind her and was gone.

"That child," Alan said, "is very tactful."

"No, it's not tact. It's just that she hates me so. She doesn't like to be in the same room with me."

"All the same, there's good in her."

Hyacinth looked at him. "Oh, my dear, she'll try to get between us as she did with her lie the other morning."

"Then she'll be unsuccessful." He came round the table to where Hyacinth stood. His arm held her. The scent of her hair was in his nostrils. "Oh, my darling, my darling," he murmured. "You don't know—"

"Oh, but Alan, I do." She put one white cool hand to his cheek. She raised her face to his.

He kissed her then—a long kiss. His head swam a little, all thought lost, before at last almost roughly he put her from him. "Aren't we here to eat our breakfasts?" His voice was as rough. He laughed, and his laugh sounded strange to him.

She smiled. Her hands were stretched across the table, her smile was adorable. The clear red flooded her cheeks and the long lashes dropped over her eyes and hid their shining.

"Alan, I do love you so. Let's get married sooner. Much sooner."

He leaped to his feet. "Hyacinth?"

"Yes. Let's have a little, tiny secret wedding—in three days' time."

"Good morning, Antonia," said the Master as he rode up.

Tony returned his greeting. She felt cheered. Sir Robert Pelte was always cordial to her, as if he liked her or had never heard the stories about her.

Hounds moved off, and behind them jogged a hundred figures, black-clothed or scarlet, with a fringe of followers on foot. Tony rode her fresh little horse with care. Crabapple didn't kick; there was no danger of being a nuisance. But sometimes in the first few minutes of the day he would buck light-heartedly. She kept her eyes between his ears, not wishing to meet anyone's glance. She had noted where Harry Beckett rode, his mother near him.

Almost abreast of her rode Hyacinth and Alan Fleming. Tony considered her future brother-in-law and his mount, and: "Shouldn't care to ride that chestnut," she thought. A puller, raking, very fresh indeed—not a lady's horse. But Alan Fleming would find him no trouble. Surely since breakfast he had changed a little? He must, she thought, have received good news. There was something different in his glance as it rested for one second on Hyacinth—something tensely, almost exultantly happy. "He's very good looking," Tony thought detachedly. And Hyacinth—"She's almost too lovely; she makes the rest of us look shoddy." Tony reflected, and was unaware of her own shy grace.

Hyacinth too seemed different this morning but not happily different. She might well seem nervous, Tony thought, as Major Cheavely manoeuvred his weight-carrying hunter into a place beside her sister. His presence must remind Hyacinth of many things—of things that she must prefer to forget now that she was engaged to another man. One would have thought that he would have kept away, but his veiled glance at Hyacinth was, this morning, as bold as ever.

Hounds ran mute, slipping across the green pastures, one field ahead. The wind and the speed of that long run had whipped the blood to Tony's cheek. Before her lay "the finest view in Europe," her horse's head and pricked ears and beyond them, fifty yards away, a stout post-and-rails. The woman on her right pulled round at sight of it, back to the gate at the other end of the field. But Tony galloped on —a post-and-rails and a small ditch beyond—Crabapple would take that in his stride.

She steadied him for the jump. He took it, rapping the rail with his heels—a darned slovenly performance. Frowning a little, Tony turned in the saddle. Alan Fleming was coming up. His chestnut horse took the stile with a little—just enough—to spare. 'Oh, lovely," she murmured. A lovely horse and beautifully ridden. And now, with a drumming of hoofs he overtook her. She gave him a small grin, slightly nervous.

He smiled at her. "You go well, Tony," he said.

She laughed a little, feeling a warmth in her heart, for his praise, she knew, was worth having.

Ahead of them at the top of the gently sloping field lay a stiff fence. Tony put Crabapple—tiring a little now—at a gap closed by a low hurdle. Alan took the tall fence. She watched him sit forward, take off, rise to it—

"Oh, God!" She heard her own cry.

A strand of wire—she saw the glint of copper, heard the twang—the chestnut horse came down end over end—a hideous fall—his rider under him.

White and sick, Tony pulled round. The chestnut horse, limping heavily, was up. His rider lay quite still.

There were shouts. Riders drew rein, raising their hats or whips in warning to those behind. And now there was a small group standing by that quiet figure on the ground. The doctor rode up, dismounted and glanced round. Tony slipped from the saddle and seized his bridle. He nodded a curt thanks.

She stood holding the two horses. Her knees, she found, were trembling. How pale was Alan's face under the brown of his skin. The doctor murmured something to the man beside him. She thought, 'Is he dead?" and a darkness filled her heart. Strange that suddenly she should care—that she should feel all life suspended while she watched that little group.

The men stood back. Alan opened his eyes. He raised his head. Someone supported his shoulders.

"That's better, old man," the doctor said. He held a flask to Alan's lips. There was a little pause. "And now, what about it?" said the doctor. "Where's the damage?"

Alan looked straight at Tony. Then his glance slipped away — he hadn't seemed to see her. Of course not; he was looking for quite another face.

"Can't feel anything below the waist," he said. "I can't move my legs. It's my back, I think."

No one spoke. She heard someone say, "Fetch a hurdle."

Alan's lips moved. "Take me home; to Holme Dacey—to my own place," he said.

'BETTER LONG WAR' SAYS 'L. G.' 'THAN MEAN GET-OUT'

Urges Gov't. to Make it Clear Air Attacks on Civilians Mean Retaliation

FOOD MOST IMPORTANT

London, Feb. 28 (CP). — David Lloyd George, addressing a meeting sponsored by the National Defence and Public Interest Committee, today urged the government to "make it clear" that air attacks on civilians will bring retaliation.

The former prime minister, one of the principal negotiators of the Versailles Treaty, declared that "when peace comes it must no longer be a sham pact that will not stand the first shower that falls upon it."

"And certainly it must be a peace that will not be a betrayal of our principles, our pledges, our promises and our trust," he declared.

"There is one thing I want to say as an old war prime minister. Better a long war than a mean get-out".

"Be Prepared For Long War."

"If you want a short war," he continued, "you must be thoroughly prepared for a long one and the enemy must know it—a long one on all fronts.

"My theme today is that at least on one vital front, in my judgment, we are not fully prepared, and that is food supplies."

He urged that Britain remember that the army and the nation must eat, declaring: "Germany forgot it the last time. She centred on her great armies. She was starved to surrender. She learned the lesson. Have we?"

Cultivate Every Acre.

"Every acre of land in this blessed isle must make its full contribution to national safety before we reach the fateful crisis," he declared.

He said there are "millions upon millions of acres of 'weed land' going to waste," and asserted "we have five million more mouths to feed and six million less tons of shipping to feed them with than in 1914-18."

Mr. Lloyd George said Germany, learning the lesson of the last war, now had doors open to Russia, Italy and Rumania for supplies while of Britain he said: "Frankly, in respect of food we are not so well off as we were the last time for a long war."

Refers to Clamor For Intervention.

Referring to clamor for intervention in Finland, the former prime minister said: "Don't run any more risks. I would not allow any reckless or inconsiderate steering on icy roads to skid us into war with Russia. It is a big job we have undertaken. It will need all our strength to get through."

Police Blotter

Maybe it was the continued cold weather that forced a sneak thief to steal a motor rug from out of a parked automobile on Front St., this week. At any rate G. W. Burrows, 219 Front Street, is minus a perfectly good motor rug, he told police yesterday. The rug was stolen from out Mr. Burrow's automobile as the vehicle was parked on Front St.

Police today warned mechants and citizens in general to watch carefully any money orders which might be tendered in payment in this city. Special Constable Fred Chapman, in charge of C.N.R. police here, yesterday informed Chief Kidd that a man and woman had successfully raised Canadian National money orders in other centres throughout Eastern Ontario, where business men had been victimized by this new racket. A description of the pair to have passed the raised money orders was afforded Belleville police by Mr. Chapman, however.

Asks Annulment to Allow Re-marriage to Step-Father

New Bedford, Mass., Feb. 28 (AP) —Judge Mahew Hitch considered today a petition by which Mrs. Ellen Garcia, 22, seeks to annul her marriage to her stepfather, Manuel Garcia, 44, in order that they might re-wed in a state which permits such alliances.

Married two years ago after the death of Garcia's first wife, the two were convicted on moral charges and sent to prison. A State Supreme Court judge ruled recently that no crime had been committed and revoked the three to five year sentence imposed on Garcia, who had served about 18 months.

S. A. Woman Has Flight in Plane Attacked by Russians

Montreal, Feb. 28—(CP)— Hazards encountered in the Salvation Army's work for relief of the Finnish people were described in a letter to Mrs. H. H. Troop of Montreal from her sister-in-law, Col. M. Sladen, wife of the Commander of the Salvation Army in besieged Finland.

Col. Sladen told how Russian airplanes had attacked a plane in which she was flying to Finland from Sweden with clothing and funds she had collected.

Mrs. Troop said Col. Sladen some time before had flown to Sweden after her husband had been injured there in an accident while campaigning for funds to support the relief work in Finland.

The wife of the Commander carried on for her husband and "worked day and night" collecting money "but most important of all collecting 10 tons of clothing," according to Mrs. Troop. The attack of her plane occurred on the return to Helsinki but the laden machine "managed to escupe", said Mrs. Troop.

WAR CONTRACTS ARE STIMULATING

Orders Are From Gas Masks to Airplanes, Weekly Labor Report Shows

Toronto, Feb. 28—(CP)— War orders are stimulating manufacturing in all sections of the province, according to the weekly labor report issued today by Labor Minister Hipel.

The orders range from gas masks to airplanes, it was revealed. Demand for skilled labor is constant.

Registration of unemployed shows a steady decrease at Brantford. Present indications point toward higher production levels in iron and steel. All textile establishments in the district are busy, with some operating day and night shifts. Two companies are contemplating opening up in Chatham shortly. Factories are working with normal staffs.

A construction company has been awarded the contract for construction of temporary accommodation at an elementary flying training school at Fort William and work is expected to start next week. Railways are still very busy.

Preference On War Orders

Hamilton reported manufacturing in a very healthy condition. War orders are being given preference and plants are operating to full capacity to complete these orders as soon as possible.

A locomotive company at Kingston is increasing staff with competent mechanics whenever they are available. A shipbuilding company expects plates and other materials in about a month.

A rubber company at Kitchener is taking on girls to complete a war order. Box factories at London are working full time, as are shoe and textile companies. Work on the airport is expected to start next week.

Former Employees Recalled

A large motor firm at Oshawa is recalling former employees of the truck production line. Skilled and semi-skilled workers are being sent from Ottawa to the R.C.A.F. at Victoria Island, daily. Supply, however, exceeds demand at present.

Demand for skilled help is increasing at St. Catharines and payrolls are reported increasing. Heavy movement of freight and grain is reported through the Sarnia terminal.

Railway shops at Stratford have increased working hours to 44 per week. Retail merchants report business ahead of last year.

Toronto reported one radio company employing more men than last year. A steel corporation has installed new machinery in order to cope with increased volume. A bridge company has re-opened a place which had been idle for some years. A gas mask company is very busy on government orders, while new government orders for airplanes is keeping another firm busy.

Textile company at Woodstock has received orders for uniform cloth.

CARDENAS TO ASK WORKERS TO TAKE CUT

Mexico City, Feb. 28 (AP)— Sources close to President Lazaro Cardenas said he would ask workers in Mexico's oil industry today to take wage cuts and accept the dismissal of 3,000 employees to effect a saving of 24,000,000 pesos (nearly $4,000,000) yearly.

The government expropriated foreign oil properties March 18, 1939, following a lengthy controversy in which the workers demanded large wage increases and a voice in operating the concerns.

SEVERAL MEMBERS INJURED

London, Feb. 28 (CP)—The press Association said today that several members of the crew of the battleship Nelson had been injured when the vessel was holed by a mine in December.

20 COAL MINERS KILLED

Rome, Feb. 28 (AP)—At least 20 coal miners were killed and about 100 injured today by an explosion in a gallery of the Arsa mines.

More victims may be buried in the wreckage of the gallery, said officials, who attributed the blast to gas.

Troops of the third contingent of the First Division of the Canadian Active Service Force are pictured here disembarking at an undisclosed British port under the interested eyes of railway porters and dockside officials. James O. Bennett Was War Correspondent

Chicago, Feb. 28 (AP)— James O'Donnell Bennett, 69, retired member of the Chicago Tribune staff and former dramatic critic and foreign correspondent, died last night at his home.

In poor health several years, he ceased his active journalistic career 13 months ago.

Bennett, a newspaper man 46 years, was one of the first Americans to cable eyewitness accounts of the first Great War. In Brussels, he and three other correspondents, Irvin Cobb, Harry Hansen and John T. McCutcheon, were locked up by the German army. Later Bennett managed to get into Germany and travel with the German army.

He covered the Spanish American war for the old Chicago Journal.

K. ROOSEVELT IS MENTIONED

Report Says He is Considered as Possible Commander of 'I.N.' Brigade

London, Feb. 28 —(CP)— About 500 British volunteers, including several Canadians, members of an international brigade organized to help Finland against Russia, were disclosed today to be already on their way to the northern war fronts.

This first contingent comprises about a quarter of the international force enlisted in Britain to give unofficial military aid to the Finns, supplementing undisclosed quantities of war materials which the British Government has sent Finland.

It was reported that Kermit Roosevelt, son of the late United States President, Theodore Roosevelt, was considered for the post of commander of the brigade by Field-Marshal Baron Carl Gustaf Mannerheim, Finland's commander-in-chief.

Roosevelt was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the British army soon after war started.

Brigade Has No Official Status

While the international brigade has no official status in Britain, its members will wear battle dress like that of the British army with silver collar badges carrying the letters "I.N" for international. They are to use British war materials already in Finland.

British organizations are continuing to collect money, clothing, medical supplies, ambulances and fire engines for Finland.

One organization announced today it has raised $688,000.

Belleville Council is holding a major degree in honour of the late Rev. Michael J. McGivney, the founder of the Order, Lecturer Frank Domenico and Grand Knight G. Lee, who are in charge of degree are working hard to make this one of the most outstanding events in the history of the Belleville Council. Arrangements are being made with Peterboro, Lindsay, Cobourg, Kingston and Brockville and Montreal Councils to take part in this degree. In the absence of our Chaplain, Rev. Monsignor J. F. Nicholson, the Lecturer called on the Rev. J. J. Collins to address the meeting, after which readings were given by Frank Domenico, Geo. O'Brien and A. Dutton.

Meeting then closed with prayer and God Save the King.

CHIMNEY FIRE IS EXTINGUISHED

Dense columns of smoke frightened residents of the apartments situated at 48 1-2 East Bridge St this afternoon when a chimney fire brought the fire department to the scene. The firemen experienced some difficulty in locating the chimney blockade, as the building is a three-storey structure. No property damage, with the exception of that caused by smoke, resulted, as the fire department soon had the trouble remedied.

Cloudburst Causes $100,000 Damage at Berkeley, Calif.

Three Raging Streams Sent Down on City, Causing Heavy Loss in 10 Minutes

CITY BADLY HIT

Engineer Goodrich Says Severely-Struck Sections Look as if Hit by Earthquake

San Francisco, Feb. 28.—(AP)— A cloudburst sent three raging streams down on Berkeley, Calif., and caused damage estimated at $100,000 within ten minutes today.

Harry Goodrich, city engineer of Berkeley, who estimated the damage, said the most severely-struck sections "look as if they had been hit by an earthquake".

Already, through many parts of Northern California, floods had forced some 3,000 persons from their homes and caused great property and crop damage.

KIWANIS CLUB TO HELP BOYS

Number Will be Placed on Farms to Assist in Summer Work

The life story of Genghis Khan, a wild tribesman but a genius for organization and conquest and compared with the life of Hitler was related to members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon on Tuesday by E. A. Simmons, past president of Trenton Rotary. Accompanying Mr. Simmons, who has sixteen years of consecutive attendance in Rotary, were Bob Derbyshire, Ben Joyce, Jim Armstrong, "Gib" Axis of the Trenton Club and other guests were "Red" Napin, W. L. Langlois, County Road Superintendent and P. M. Woods. Albert Boynton, Past President of the Belleville Club and now a resident of Cornwall was asked by President Bill Anderson to take charge of the meeting. Jack McIntosh acted as sergeant-at-arms, Harold Carruthers as song leader and Leo B. Riggs presided at the piano in his always brilliant manner.

The reports on a number of committees were given the club by Sid Howell and enthusiastically received by the club. The Public Affairs Committee under Jack McVeigh arranged for the opening of five rinks for the children and connected with the enterprise were Percy McGuire of Rotary, Lorne McDougall of Y's Men, and Bill Hurst of Kinsmen. Ed Willing and his committee are going to place young boys on the farms during the month of July, where they will secure their board and some spending money and at the same time assist the farmer in getting the work done for it is believed by the Club members there is going to be a shortage of help in the next year or so. The work started by Ross Stiver in which young boys are found positions has been carried on and at the present time six boys have been placed in good jobs. The Agricultural Committee is going to continue the poultry project so successfully carried out last year by Herb Muir and his committee.

The speaker was introduced by Bruce Lattimer and Kiwanian appreciation was expressed by Jack McIntosh. Mr. Simmons told of the life of Genghis Khan, who with no education excepting a flare for conquest, rose from a poor nomad to be ruler of the large part of the known world at that time. "He built an empire greater than Rome" said the speaker. "At one time he was master of 100,000 tents and a militarist strategist of the first order."

GEN. GOUGH URGES WAR WITH RUSSIA

Commander of British Fifth Army in Last War Says Such Action Would Influence Italy

London, Feb. 28 (CP).—General Sir Hubert Gough, commander of the British Fifth Army in France during the last war, today urged Great Britain and France to go to war at once with Soviet Russia.

"Our open resistance to Russian aggression now will go a long way toward influencing Italian policy in our favor," General Gough argued in an article in the "English-speaking World".

"This is a point of great importance, for the eventual attitude of Italy is still entirely uncertain," he said.

"A comparatively small use of our sea power could cut Russian communications in the Arctic. It would not call for an effort beyond our resources, while probably saving a much greater effort later."

CONSISTORIES HELD ON MARCH SEVENTH

Vatican City, Feb. 28—(CP-Havas)—Mgr. Carlo Respighi, Prefect of Pontifical ceremonies, today issued an "intimatic" — an official call—to the Cardinals and Prelates of the Papal Court for secret and public consistories to be held March 7.

The secret consistory will appoint new bishops and the public consistory will deal with ceremonies preparatory to canonization of the blessed Marie Sainte Euphrasie Pelletier and the blessed Gemma Galgani.

LONE BANDIT SECURES $300

Branch of Bank of Toronto Held Up and Getaway Made in Car

Toronto, Feb. 28—(CP)—An armed man held up and robbed a North Toronto branch of the bank of Toronto today shortly after noon and escaped with about $300. He made his getaway in a car, in charge of a companion, which waited at the curb during the robbery.

The holdup took place at the branch bank at the corner of Mount Pleasant and Belsize Avenues. When the robber entered the building he herded employees into the back and grabbed the money. Police cruiser cars immediately began searching for the robber car.

Three Arrested After Cache of Goods is Found

Toronto, Feb. 28—(CP)—Three men are in police custody today following the discovery in a private garage here last night of an alleged cache of clothing stolen from a general store at Shelburne, Dufferin county.

William Radford, 25, Wingham, and Cecil Black, 34, Toronto, who walked into the arms of police officers hidden in the garage, were charged with breaking into the store last Sunday. A third man escaped over back fences at the time but a suspect later was taken into custody on a vagrancy charge.

Thirty-five stitches were required to close head wounds of Constable Alex Petch who was beaten by the persons who robbed the Shelburne store. He attempted to grapple with the thieves, who beat him unconscious.

Commander Wishes Some of Publicity Given to Captain

London, Feb. 28—(CP)—Lieut.-Commander Bradwell Talbot Turner, who led the boarding party from the destroyer Cossack which freed the prisoners on the Altmark said today he found the resulting publicity "has obscured from the public the tremendous responsibility which my captain had to carry both in entering the Fjord and carrying out the operation."

In a letter answering a congratulatory message from the Littlehampton urban district council, he said: "The incident was certainly spectacular and thrilling but not nearly so dangerous as much of the routine work of my service. We were all very pleased to have had the luck to be in the right spot at the right time."

JUDGE SENTENCES MAN TO HANG

Accused Denies He Committed Crime When Asked if He Had Anything to Say

Montreal, Feb. 28.—(CP)—Gordon Campbell Smythe, 44, was convicted today by a King's Bench Court jury of the murder of his 70-year-old landlord and was sentenced by Chief Justice R. A. E. Greenshields to be hanged Friday, May 31. The jury, which retired at the end of the afternoon hearing yesterday, brought in the verdict at the start of today's session.

"It seems to be absolutely ridiculous to prosecute an innocent man", Smythe protested when Judge Greenshields asked him if he had anything to say before sentence was passed.

"I was not in my home when this terrible thing is said to have been done there and all the evidence that has been brought against me is unwarranted and uncalled for.

"You are trying to make me out a murderer in a case of which I know nothing and with which I am not in any way, shape or form connected, or any member of my family," the prisoner said.

Hawks Humbled by Bruins With Cowley, Hill, Conacher Collecting 12 Scoring Points

Nine Game Win Streak of Chicago Broken, While Boston Edges Closer to Rangers

LINE CLICKING

Kraut Line Only Figured in One Goal in Game Last Night

Boston, Feb. 28—(CP)—The sad part about playing Boston Bruins, as has been demonstrated to many an opponent time and again, is that even when the famed Kraut line of Milt Schmidt, Bobby Bauer and Woody Dumart is held in check another formation generally manages to show scoring power.

Chicago Black Hawks did a pretty fair job of staving off the Kraut kids last night ,with only Bauer getting a tally, but the Bruins' line of Bill Cowley, Roy Conacher and Mel Hill went on a scoring spree that meant five goals and seven assists as the Hawks were humbled 6-0. It was Chicago's first loss in 10 National Hockey League games.

To Conacher and Hill went two goals and two assists apiece while Cowley, their centreman, picked up a goal and helped in three.

Besides bringing an end to a two-game losing streak, Bruins used the victory to draw to within two points of the leading Rangers. The Bruins have two games in hand over the Manhattan Blues.

The 77 points compiled this season by the Conacher-Cowley-Hill line looks more impressive when it is considered that Conacher was out of action for more than a month with an injury and Hill missed several games. Despite this Conacher, the leading goal-scorer in the N.H.L. last year with 26, has scored 13 so far, Hill has nine and Cowley 12.

Seabiscuit Can Go Down as Biggest Money Winner

Los Angeles, Feb. 28 —(AP)—The rosiest dream of all is that Seabiscuit will win the $100,000 added Santa Anita Handicap and go down in turf annals as the biggest money winner of all times—but it will take more than dreams to get the 'Biscuit across the wire a winner Saturday.

There is no doubt that nearly everybody is pulling for Seabiscuit to win. People who bet against the gallant old campaigner last week stood and shouted when he burst across the finnish line the victor. They'll do it again this week if a Seabiscuit triumph comes to pass.

The fact remains, however, that the star of the C. S. Howard stable failed by a nose to win the Santa Anita classic in 1937 from Rosemont, and failed again in 1938, by another nose ,to Stagehand.

Seabiscuit must carry 130 pounds in the mile and one quarter grind. That was the weight he carried against Stagehand. Stagehand, a colt, packed only 100.

There probably is no Stagehand to worry about this year, however. Featherweighted candidates, at this date, don't seem to figure.

There are others of known merit, to which the 'Biscuit must give weight, including Heelfly at 114 pounds; Specify, 116; Whichcee, 114; Don Mike, 112, and Can't Wait, which must be reckoned with at a mere 108.

PETE LANGELLE

Pete Langelle

Out of the west have moved a multitude of hockey players to N. H. L. stardom including as one of the recent parties, Pete Langelle, shifty-hipped centre with Toronto Maple Leafs. He's playing his first full season with the team and already knots are beginning to appear in opposing players' legs from trying to keep track of his whirling dervish movements. Pete attracted Maple Leaf attention in the Memorial cup finals three years ago when he helped Winnipeg Monarchs take the Canadian junior crown by checking the opposition dizzy in the series. On being signed as a Leaf he was sent to Syracuse for a couple of seasons, coming up near the close of last year and remaining. He got one goal in league play and one in the playoffs last season. Only recently having passed his 22nd milestone Langelle should have many years of starring in the N.H.L. ahead. Winnipeg was his birthplace and he played all his amateur hockey there. Shoots left and tips the scales around the 170-pound mark. With the Toronto system of switching around 20 players to fill the 15 starting roles each game, Pete has not had a chance to get linked with a consistent line, but he's seen as much action as most members of the squad.

TOMORROW: Art Jackson, Bruins.

'SIMON' LEGRIS LEADING SCORER OF THE AIRMEN

Centre Player Notched Six Goals and Assisted in Same Number

LEMIEUX SECOND

Same Player Also Bad Man of Team With 26 Minutes in Penalty Box

"Simon" Legris, veteran centre player with the R.C.A.F. intermediate "A" Club in the O.H.A., was the leading scorer with the "Flyers" in the past season. Legris with six goals and an equal number of assists played nine of the club's ten games with a total scoring record of 12 points. Besides being the leading scorer of the club Legris finished the season without serving a single penalty for rough play. Second in the scoring column was "Frenchy" Lemieux, who scored five goals and had two assists from a scoring average of seven points.

Only three of Coach Holway's regulars competed in all ten games as played by the Flyers, Lemieux, Irvine and Higgins playing every game of the current O.H.A. season. Although the veteran defenceman, "Pops" Ervine served the greatest number of penalties, eleven in all, Lemieux served 26 minutes in the "cooler," as the result of a major penalty imposed. Higgins also served a major penalty during the season. Coach Holway introduced 19 players in Air Force uniforms, including two goalkeepers, Gibson and Driscoll. As a team the Flyers served 82 minutes in penalties.

Team Scored 29 Goals

The Flyers scored 29 goals collectively and added 20 assists for total scoring points of 49, while their opponents scored 52 goals in ten games. In seven games versus Peterboro the "Flyers" scored 13 goals, while in three against the Belleville Redmen, the Airmen bulged the twine on 16 occasions.

In nine games played goalie Laurie Gibson saw the red light flash 44 times behind him, while in the remaining contest Driscoll allowed eight pucks to pass him.

The individual scoring records of the Flyers for the season of 1940 were:

GARCIA TO HAVE PULL IN WEIGHTS

Will Meet Armstrong for His Share of Middleweight Title

Los Angeles, Feb 28—(AP) — Los Angeles' two stars of the fistic world, Henry Armstrong and Ceferino Garcia, ease off training routines today but blasts of confidence over their battle Friday night grow louder from each fighter's camp.

The encounter, a 10-round match for Garcia's share of the middleweight championship of the world, promises to be one of the bitterest in local ring history, with Hammerin' Henry seeking to annex his fourth title and Garcia out to avenge a 15-round decision lost to the negro lad in November, 1938.

Garcia remains a slight favorite, chiefly because of a hefty weight advantage. Armstrong's natural poundage is a few ounces shy of 140. Mead wants him to weigh in around 141 or 142, if possible. Garcia figures to scale around 153 or 154.

Fred Thurrier of Springfield Indians was next in line with 45 points, while another three-way tie found Max Bennett and Jack Toupin of the Stars and Norm Schultz of the Indians with 44 each.

Pete Bessone of Pittsburgh Hornets had a record of 92 minutes in the penalty box

TRAINING CAMP BRIEFS

(By the Associated Press)

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 28—(AP)—Buddy Lewis, Washington's popular third baseman for the last few seasons, is taking regular turns in the outfield in preparation for a permanent assignment there. Coach Clyde Milan, who is handling the conversion of the hard-hitting infielder into a fly chaser, says Buddy's hardest task will be changing his style of throwing from sidearm to overhand.

Bradenton, Fla.—Casey Stengel's broad grin apparently means that he can pick pitchers who can hit, whether or not they can pitch. Wilbur McElroy, a youngster from the University of Southern California who Casey picked up personally for Boston Bees, belted a 400-foot home run over the fence yesterday with two on board.

Avalon, Calif.—Manager Gabby Hartnett of Chicago Cubs, following his "reform" program, continues to be a jolly fellow in camp despite the absence of holdouts Diz Dean, Augie Galan and Hank Leiber and the fact that catcher Al Todd reported overweight.

Anaheim, Calif. — Philadelphia Athletics practice has its light as well as serious side. Although the camp was worried yesterday about Benny McCoy's sore arm, which Benny says is something that happens every spring and soon disappears, the players got some fun out of fielding oranges which four Anaheim girls tossed at them for the benefit of photographers.

Lakeland, Fla. — Manager Del Baker of Detroit had words of praise for Tom Seats, former St. Louis Cardinals farmhand, after sizing him up yesterday. "I don't know whether he will eventually become one of the stars of the league, but he has plenty of stuff," said Del.

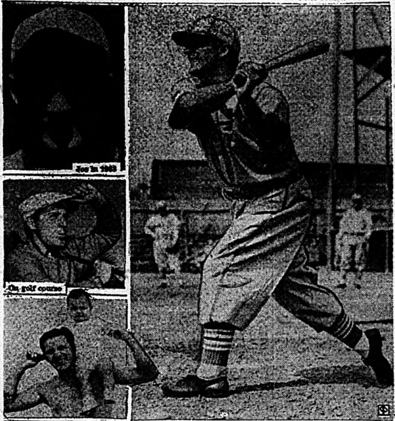
DIAMOND METEORS

Medwick Blasted Way to Top From Small-Town Mill Hand



By Central Press Canadian

Joe Medwick literally blasted his way up into the "Gas-House Gang".

From a humble spot as a millworker, with the change from a $10 bill for weekly wages, Joe banged his way to the heights, to domination of the National league sluggers, and to a salary which makes cabinet ministers look underpaid.

Joe came from Carteret, N.J., a small town just out of the shadows of Manhattan's sky-scrapers. From odd jobs he worked his way up to mill-hand at a Carteret textile plant. This paid his way through high school and he saved almost enough to enter Notre Dame that fall. This was in 1930.

Gets Ball Offer

Young Medwick wracked his brain and wore out his shoes seeking a job with real pay. The mills were idling along in the trough of depression. No work, no job, no pay. When the Scottdale, Pa., ball club made him an offer Joe grabbed his big bat and rushed off to play baseball. July found him roaming the outfield for Scottdale nad slugging like a demon at bat. He was playing upnder a pseudonym. "King", because his plans still included Notre Dame and collegiate sports.

It was a glorious summer. Medwick tore the legs off the outfielders with his powerful hitting. In September Medwick decided that baseball and a bankroll looked better than Notre Dame.

In no time at all, Medwick was playing the outfield for the Houston Buffs in the Texas league. He battered the fences with screaming drives that were, as one scribe put it ,"ducky wucky". The sobriquet stuck. The St. Louis Cards called Medwick to the bigtime to join the Gas-House Gang. That was in 1932.

In 1937 Medwick led the National league in most runs scored, most base hits, most runs batted in, most two-base hits—and tied for home runs. The handsome youngster from the little New Jersey town was sitting on top of the world, his pockets full of money and his gilt-edged record.

He is still there today, the Ace of the Cards—a young man well on his way.

"Simon" Legris, who has been making plays for the Air Force "Flyers" at centre ice for the past four seasons, led his team-mates as the leading scorer of the "birdmen" for the current O.H.A. hockey season. Legris was rather consistant in his scoring efforts, getting an assist for every goal he scored and played nine games in all. Legris scored six goals and had six assists for twelve scoring points. "Frenchy" Lemieux was next in line with seven scoring points, as the result of five goals and two assists. Strangely enough only three of Coach Holway's "flying pucksters" took part in every O.H.A. game played in the O.H.A., they being "Pops" Irvine, veteran defenceman and backbone of the team. "Mush" Higgins and Lemieux. However, the Flyers gained one hockey distinction even though out-classed by the Petes, the "Airmen" won the George Van Horne Memorial Cup, in the Kingston pre - season league, for three consecutive years. The only other club to come near to this record was the Belleville "Oilers" of 1934 and 1935.

During the past O.H.A. campaign the Flyers scored 29 goals in ten games, an average of nearly three goals per match. However their opponents flashed the red light behind the Airmen's cage exactly 52 times, for an average of slightly over five goals per game. As we pointed out the Flyers scored 29 goals this year in the O.H.A., which is a less quantity than Louie Lecompte and Eric McNeeley scored between them during the 1937 season. That year Lecompte led the Flyers with 17 goals and 19 assists, while Eric McNeeley was second with 19 goals and 9 assists, giving these two boys 36 goals between them, or seven goals more than the entire 1940 Flyer team registered. Of course the 1937 Flyers took part in seventeen games, while the Airmen only played ten this year. During the 1937 season the Flyers scored 93 goals with 73 being scored against them. That season Coach Tommy Lawrence used only 12 players all season, two of whom played less than five games. This year Coach Holway introduced 19 players in a Flyer uniform. The 1940 scoring records of the Flyers appear elsewhere in today's issue.

Unless the Belleville juveniles kick through with a win over the Picton kids tonight, hockey will ring down its final curtain in Belleville, that is with the exception of Thursday night's Norwood High School versus Albert College senior interscholastic game here Thursday night. As for the juvenile tussle Bill Dennis' kids can win tonight, providing they play heads-up hockey inside of the Picton defence zone. Like the majority of minor league teams, the local juveniles lack that much-needed scoring punch and are completely lost when inside the opponents' blue line. However, it is in these juvenile games the boys must learn to take advantages, when they are presented. The main object of the game is to get that little black rubber disc past the opposing goalie and this can't be accomplished by blazing away directly into the goalie's pads. Judging from Monday night's game Belleville has a better defence than Picton, while players like Barrett, Goyer, Kellar and Rosebush should improve as they continue in the game. The winner of the Belleville-Picton series meets Regiopolis College in the second round O.J.H.A. playdowns.

A news dispatch observed recently from Lindsay revealed the fact Oshawa had won the Carew Trophy. The mere mention of the name Carew should bring back fond memories of local hockey and curling fans. Old time hockey fans will recall the sturdy Art Carew, who played defence in a grand manner for the Lindsay midgets of years ago while the Carew Trophy was one of curling's coveted cups a couple of decades ago. To journey to Lindsay and lift the Carew cup was the aspiration of every curling club in Central Ontario. Incidentally we wonder if there are men in Belleville who are still sufficiently interested in curling to re-organize that sterling game here? Belleville, at one time, boasted of some of the best curlers in the country, but where is the interest in community sports today.

Did you know that the word "Fan," as termed in sports regarding a supporter, has no gender? The word is derived from the word fanatic and is quite suitable, insofar as some supporters are concerned.

Do you remember when baseball's most dynamic personality, John J. McGraw, was buried at New York six years ago today? Forty-two years in the game—30 as manager of the New York Giants—the game's "little Napoleon' had turned over the managership to Bill Terry in 1932 but continued as vice-president of the club. He led 10 New York teams to National league honors and three to world championships—an all-time record.

SPORT SPICE—The Belleville "Y" cagers passed out of the O.B.A. picture last night when the locals bowed to Kingston "Y" 42 to 34......With Ed Schrieder, Herb Burley and Al Wickerson all banished for minor fouls in the last six minutes, the Limestone City quintette had little trouble scoring against the weakened locals....Frank Buckland's Peterboro' intermediates drew first blood in the intermediate "A" playdowns of the O.H.A. with a 4-1 win over Port Colborne last night......It looks as though Owen Sound Trappers will be the fourth team in the intermediate round robin series ......Wonder what Promoter Jacobs has underneath the $40,000 cloak offer to Jimmy McLarin tempting him out of retirement to meet the Garcia-Armstrong winner?......Who says prize fighters are a bunch of stumblebums......recently Gene Tunney won a wager from Professor Jacob Baccus Taylor, of Ohio University, regarding their respective knowledge of Shakespeare's "Macbeth."

2 GERMAN VESSELS SUNK IN ARCTIC SAYS BERGEN REPORT

Bergen, Norway, Feb. 28.—(AP) Reports received here from the northern-most tip of Norway say Allied warships have sunk two German vessels near the Arctic coast of Finland.

The reports from Vardoe, 50 miles northwest of Finland's Petsamo Fjord, said the ships had been sunk in the Petsamo vicinity, but did not say whether they were warships, or merchantmen, and gave no details of the action.

Little Benny's Note Book

Glasses Magee had to go a errand to White's drugstore for borick powder, me going with him out of good nature, and we started to go out again and some lady came in and sat down on a stool in front of the soda fountain, saying, May I have a glass of water, please, I feel so faint.

Being a big lady looking as if she wished she weighed less, and I whispered to Glasses, G, do you think she's really going to faint? and Glasses whispered, I dont know, she kinds of looks like it around the expression.

Wich she did, and me and Glasses started to waist time walking around the drugstore, Glasses saying, I wont say I actually hope she does, but if she does what's a use of missing it?

That's a way I feel about it, I said. And we stayed there trying to look like customers, and pritty soon I said, Good night she's got her eyes shut, I bet she's going to do it.

G wizzickers do you think we ought to try to stop her? Glasses said, and I said, How? and he said, Well, she only drank half her water, we could throw the rest in her face and revieve her, couldn't we?

Sure, but she might not like it, I said. Hay, I tell you what, why dont you blow your police whissle and surprise her out of it? I said.

Sounding like a good idea, and Glasses went and stood alongside of her and blew a fearse blow on his police whissle, and she quick opened her eyes saying, O my goodness, O great heavens.

How do you feel? I said, and she said, How do you suppose I feel after a terrible blast from the lower regions has gone off in my ears? I could just slap somebody, the idea, she said.

And she got off the stood mad and walked out looking as healthy as anybody, proving she might of only been a bargain hunter looking for a free glass of water.

AT THE CAPITOL

"South of the Border"

A number of new songs make their appearance in "South of the Border", Republic picture which comes to the Capitol Theatre, next with Gene Autry in the lead.

The numbers include "Girl of My Dreams", "Moon of Manana" by Johnnie Margin; "Come to The Fiesta" by Art Wenzel of the Checkerboard Band of Chicago; "Goodbye Little Darling" by Johnnie Marvin and Gene Autry; and "Merry-Go-Roundup", to be sung by Mary Lee, of Ted Weems' Orchestra who flew out to the coast for a role in the film.

The theme song of the picture is of course, the sensationally popular "South of the Border" which was featured by Gene Autry on his English tour, and which chalked up a million and half copies in sales in England alone.

Before Gene Autry's films are released in the British Isles they are screened privately for Gene's greatest English fans, little Princess Elizabeth and her sister, Margaret Rose. Princess Elizabeth, when asked what she'd like best to do in all the world, replied, "Ride Gene Autry's horse, Champion."

The added attraction the Adventures of Tailspin Tommy in "Sky Patrol" starring John Trent, Jackie Coogan and Marjorie Reynolds.

The 6th Chapter of the thrilling detective serial "Red Barry" and a colored cartoon complete the bill.

AT THE BELLE

"Eternally Yours"

Walter Wanger's new comedy romance, "Eternally Yours" which comes next to the Belle theatre is a most welcome addition to film fare. It is a fast moving, sparkling modern-day comedy, brilliantly directed, smartly mounted and played by a cast of outstanding stars and players.

Loretta Young and David Niven are the starring duo, and both these top-notch actors turn in good performances. The supporting cast is enhanced by such well known performers as Billie Burke, Hugh Herbert, Zasu Pitts, Broderick Crawford and Ralph Graves. The direction was by Tay Garnett who has brought to the production smoothness, swiftness, drama and suspense. An excellent screen play by Gene Towne and Graham Baker is responsible for the bright and witty dialogue, the exciting romantic scenes, the thrillingly paced story and the brilliant backgrounds.

"Eternally Yours" is not only delightful entertainment in an excitingly romantic vein, it is brilliant spectacle. For the new picture features some of the most thrilling scenes in motion pictures in a long time. The scenes showing Arturo performing his magic for his audiences are presented with unusual lighting effects and telling suspense. And the picture is highlighted by spectacular air scenes showing daredevil, death-defying parachute jumps over Croydon Airdrome and the World's Fair which are guaranteed to thrill audiences beyond words.

"Bad Little Angel

"Bad Little Angel" poignant romance of childhood, will be the companion feature attraction with Virginia Weidler, juvenile actress of "The Women" and "Out West With the Hardys," teamed with Gene Reynolds, boy actor of "Boys Town" and "They Shall Have Music." The play, hailed in Hollywood as the emotional successor to "Boys Town," tells the story of a little orphanage waif who has been taught implicit faith in the Bible and through this faith runs away from the institution and finds herself in a quaint New Jersey village where the town newspaper editor and his wife take her in. The editor loses his job through influence of the town millionaire. The little girl believes that she is a "jinx." She confronts the millionaire to plead for "Daddy Jim"; a factory fire occurs; her foster father is rescued by the two children, and the child's faith and courage so affect the lives of the different characters that their problems are solved. The story is laid in a quaint village in the early nineties. William Thiele directed a cast that includes Lois Wilson, recently returned to Hollywood from the New York stage, Guy Kibbee, Ian Hunter, Elizabeth Patterson, Reginald Owen, Henry Hull and Toto, the famous little dog of "The Wizard of Oz." The story is based on Margaret Turnbull's best-seller novel, "Looking After Sandy."

Come and see $20.00 awarded to last week's True-False game winner this week.

2 Smart Features

Roaring romantic thrills are revealed in "20,000 Men a Year" featuring Randolph Scott, Margaret Lindsay, Mary Healey, Preston Foster and Robert Shaw. This gripping story of the Airmen of tomorrow is now being presented at the Belle with the hilarious domestic comedy "The Honeymoon's Over" featuring Stuart Erwin and Marjorie Weaver. The popular Belle news of the day will be exhibited on the same program.

AT THE McCARTHY

"MEXICAN SPITFIRE"

Fiery Lupe Velez, famed for her vivacious comedy characterizations, comes next to the screen at the McCarthy Theatre in her latest romantic fun-film, "Mexican Spitfire," in which she plays the title role. This RKO Radio picture is a sequel to Miss Velez' recent "The Girl From Mexico," hilarious romantic comedy.

Continuing her madcap adventures as a Latin in Manhattan, the volatile star is again seen as a Mexican entertainer. Returning from her honeymoon with her advertising executive husband, Donald Woods, she is greeted by the jealous ex-fiance of her husband, Linda Hayes, a society girl. Also on hand is her husband's shrewish aunt, Elizabeth Risdon, who has always championed the society deb's cause, and the uncle, Leon Errol, whose sympathy is with the newlyweds.

Lupe's rival maliciously gets her intoxicated and persuades her to pose as her husband's secretary during an important meeting between him and a British client. Complications arise when the Englishman accepts an invitation for dinner at the advertising man's home in order to close a big contract.

Since Lupe has already posed as his secretary, Woods cannot introduce her as his wife, so the society girl pretends to be his bride. When Lupe and the uncle learn the important client cannot attend the dinner, they hit upon a clever scheme.

The uncle impersonates the Britisher and proceeds to insult everyone at the table. But the real English client unexpectedly shows up and vast confusion results.

The conspiracy of Lupe and the uncle backfires and they are obliged to flee to Mexico where the tempestuous bride obtains a phoney divorce. Their return to New York on the eve of Woods' marriage to Lupe's rival, leads to the uproarious climax in which the madcap Lupe wins back her man after a violent knock-down-and-drag-out fracas.

EDGAR KENNEDY COMEDY

Preceding the feature presentation, Edgar Kennedy in an uproarious twenty minute comedy "Feathered Pests" and a technicolor Walt Disney cartoon Mickey Mouse in "Brave Little Tailor" add more pleasant minutes which makes the entire show a gala event of fun certain to be enjoyed by every moviegoer from five to seventy.

"SUED FOR LIBEL"

The gay and romantic mystery comedy "Sued for Libel" featuring Kent Taylor, Linda Hayes and Thurston Hall is now showing at the McCarthy Theatre. In addition "Fox Movietone News" presents the pictures of the state funeral of Lord Tweedsmuir and many other important world-wide happenings of the past two weeks. An excellent all-star comedy and Walt Disney cartoon complete the program. From the receipts of this program fifteen percent is given to the Belleville Branch of The Army and Navy Veterans as a donation to their War Service Fund, which should make it therefore doubly important to you that you do not miss this fine show.

Belleville Cagers Lose to Kingston By 42-34 Score

The Belleville "Y" cagers passed gracefully from the Ontario Basketball Association picture as they dropped a 42 to 34 decision in the final game of the E.O.B.A. group at Kingston last night when the Limestone City intermediates rallied to score eight points in the last few minutes of play and snatch victory from a weakened Belleville quintette, the local squad being riddled with penalties and banishments.

Locals Rally

Trailing 22 to 16 at the halfway mark the Belleville squad rallied strongly early in the second session with Cole and Edwards pacing the attack. With a few minutes to go and the score tied, however, Schrieder, Wickerson and Burley were banished for minor fouls, leaving the Belleville team shorthanded. With substitutes in the main Belleville defensive positions, the Kingston hoopsters sank four baskets in the final few minutes and snatched victory as well as the group title from under the noses of the battling Belleville basketeers.

Finlay and Vivian led the homesters in victory, while Cole and Edwards accounted for 22 of the locals' aggregate points. The victorious Kingston quintette now meet the winners of the T.A.B.A. in the first round provincial basketball playdowns.

The box score:

Belleville	G.	F.	Pts.
Wickerson, rg.	1	1	3
Cole, c.	4	3	8
Wright, lg.	0	0	0

WILSON REJECTED PERSHING'S PLAN

U. S. Commander Wanted Simultaneous Military and Diplomatic Offensives on All Fronts to End Great War Quickly

Washington, Feb. 28 — (AP) — Woodrow Wilson's rejection of a plan which General John J. Pershing thought would hasten the end of the first Great War was disclosed today by the State Department's publication of a letter from Wartime United States President to State Secretary Robert Lansing.

The letter, found among the confidential papers given the State Department by Lansing's family, concerned a proposal by Pershing on August 30, 1918, for simultaneous military and diplomatic offensives on all fronts as a final sledgehammer blow to the weakening Germans.

(Another of the Lansing papers published recently disclosed, however, that Pershing, Commander-in-Chief of the American expeditionary force, opposed the Armistice two months later because he wanted the Allies to push on to "complete victory" in order to assure permanent peace.)

At Pershing's request, the diplomatic liaison officer with the Supreme War Council wrote to President Wilson:—

"He (Pershing) believes that the successful advance of the Allies on the Western Front will continue and while he does not consider that the Germans are yet beaten, he is satisfied that morale of their troops is bad.

"Under these circumstances, he thinks that united action should be taken to bring about the end of the war if possible before next year."

Four Proposals

Under the Pershing plan President Wilson would:—

1—Urge the Allies to attack simultaneously on the Italian front, at Saloniki and in Mesopotamia if possible.

2—"Address words of encouragement to that section of the Russian public which is pro-ally."

3—Intimate to Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey (Germany's allies) "that the time has come for them to yield."

4—Apply pressure on the neutrals, especially Spain, to join the allies.

With that action General Pershing believed "the defeat of Germany, which he now considers cer-

President Wilson replied on September 2:—

"Such a message as this from General Pershing surprises me very much. It is the first time he has undertaken to give advice, political as well as military, in this way.

"I am clear that it would be out of the question for me to urge, without the (at least intimated) concurrence of the Supreme Military Council, such action in all the military theatres of the war; and it is equally clear to me that events not any suggestions from us, will determine the action of Bulgaria and Turkey. . . . . ."

The Armistice on November 11 came before General Pershing had the opportunity to push his plan any further.

ARTILLERY FIRE SHAKES HOUSES

Frontier Villages of Luxembourg Witness German Movements Across the Moselle River

Brussels, Feb. 28 — (AP)—Artillery fire of increased intensity was reported to be shaking houses of the frontier villages of neutral little Luxembourg today while heavy German troop movements were sighted across the Moselle (Mosel) River.

Unusually heavy road and rail traffic was visible across the river. A steady stream of cavalry, cyclists, infantry, ammunition and food columns have been noticeable since Saturday.

The Obermosel Zeitung said barracks had sprung up overnight halfway between Menning and Besch in the Rhineland region.

Observers could not say whether the German troops moving southward were manoeuvring or reinforcing troops in the Saar section.

Light offerings were not difficult to move on the butter market, although trading was not active. Ontario creamery solids remained at 26 cents per pound for No. 1 grades. Broken lots of the Western make changed hands at 26 1-4 cents, with no sales reported in carload shipments in the range of 26 1-4 to 26 1-2 cents per pound. Judge to Decide Whether Prince Pays $1,000 Month

Los Angeles, Feb. 28 (AP) — Whether Prince David Mdivani shall pay $1,000 monthly to Mae Murray, the silent screen star, was left for a judge to decide today.

The case, centring around the much-disputed custody of their son Koran David, 13, was taken under submission yesterday after testimony of threats from both principals.

Said Mdivani:

"She threatened to kill me if I did not give her money."

Retorted his divorced wife:

"He threatened to kidnap the boy and put him where I could never find him."

Miss Murray, who has said she was worth millions in 1926, is seeking funds with which to establish a home for the boy.

GEO. KETCHESON PRES. OF YOUNG CONSERVATIVES

Organization Meeting Held With George Stokes, Candidate, as Principal Speaker

WELL ATTENDED

Electing Mr. George Ketcheson of Sidney, as the president of their organization as they convened at the local Conservative Committee Rooms for their inaugural meeting, the National Young Conservatives of South Hastings listened to Mr. George H. Stokes, local National Conservative candidate, as he denounced the King government on what he termed "its failure to cooperate with Dr. Manion, leader of the opposition, and also with the province of Ontario to the Dominion's best effort in the prosecution of the war."

With a fair representation from Belleville and district in attendance the meeting got under way with Mr. Jacob Goodman acting as chairman, while Ald. "Derby" Jeffery performed the duties of secretary for the evening. Mr. Goodman explained to the meeting the Youth Movement of the National Conservative party. Mr. Goodman then called on Mr. Stokes to speak.

"As Canadians and citizens of this riding we should direct our attention to the events which have given rise to the present election," said Mr. Stokes, as he prepared to cite the reasons for the King Government's quick dissolution of parliament and the calling of the present election. Mr. Stokes claimed Mr. King had not kept faith with Dr. Manion with respect to calling the election, having promised there would be no election without an intervening session of parliament.

Meets Disapproval is Claim

Mackenzie King realized, Mr. Stokes said, that his dealings with Great Britain with respect to the British Empire Training plan were such as to meet the complete disapproval of the people. Mr. King denied Great Britain the right to establish at her own expense, this air training plan upon the theory that Canada could not permit the training of nationals of another country within her borders except under the Department of Defence. He claimed that the co-operation with Great Britain from an economical standpoint had been unsound. Had the air training scheme gone through, when proposed by the British government, Canada would have stood to gain through airplane manufacturing contracts, but now many of these contracts have been awarded to American interests.

Mr. Stokes stated that this country has never played the part which it should in the cost of the operation of the British Empire in its war and peace efforts, but that Mr. King has mistaken the attitude of this country is disclosed in a statement which he made in 1939, as follows: "The idea that every twenty years this country should feel called upon to save a continent that cannot run itself seems to many a nightmare and sheer madness." The British Empire is not attempting to run the European continent, but is making this effort for the purpose of democracy and those liberties which we in this country insist on maintaining," he said.

Mr. Stokes charged the King Government with wholesale political patronage since its election in 1936, that Montrealers were promised that if their candidates were returned, the C.N.R. Dorchester Station would be completed at a cost of eighteen million dollars. The deal was made and the election was won. The candidate made reference to the post office which was proposed to be built at Tweed and he gave credit to Tweed residents for turning down the proposition.

Speaker Makes Claim

Mr. King did not give parliament its democratic right to investigate his administration before going to the polls, stated Mr. Stokes. His budget for this year will be approximately one billion dollars, which exceeds by hundreds of millions any previous budget, war time or otherwise.

Due to the stress of war time, Mr. King promised that he would stay in Ottawa and conduct his campaign from there, but now he proposes to make a transcontinental tour. How different from the situation in Great Britain, as indicated by a speech made by Winston Churchill, wherein he said: "In our country public men are proud to be the servants of the people . . . ministers of the Crown feel themselves strengthened by having at their side the House of Commons . . sitting with great regularity."

In closing, Mr. Stokes submitted himself as a candidate in the coming election, saying, "Accordingly I present myself to you as one who is anxious and willing to offer myself as a National Government candidate, along with those other public minded citizens in the country, who, if a National Government is returned, will see that we have at Ottawa a national policy which is fitting for this country to adhere to and one which will permit us to mantain our responsibility as the largest and most important Dominion in the British Empire.

Dr. W. C. Morgan made a short address stating that this was the first and only time that the youth of this country had had the opportunity of securing representation in parliament. The National Conservative party will do for the youth what former governments have failed to do, he said.

It was decided that the first activity of the local Young Conservative organization would be in the form of a dance scheduled for the near future. Talented speakers are to be contacted, including Sylvanus Apps, of the Toronto Maple Leafs, with regard to speaking at future meetings. Following the election of officers, membership cards were given out.

The officers of the National Young Conservatives of South Hastings are:

Swiss Inhabitants Hear Gunfire Near Friedrichshafen in Germany

Romanshorn, Switzerland, Feb. 28 (AP).—Inhabitants along the Swiss shore of Lake Constance were startled this afternoon by what sounded like an air raid on the old zeppelin works across the lake near Friedrichshafen, Germany.

A heavy fog screened the factories, which now are making warplane motors, from the view of the Swiss, but German anti-aircraft batteries along the German shore were heard firing sporadically for nearly fifteen minutes around 3 p.m., and the sound of plane motors was heard.

There was no indication of the identity of the planes heard, and no bomb explosions were heard.

Allied planes were first reported to have flown over Friedrichshafen last Sept. 25.

BRITISH EDUCATION COSTS ESTIMATED

London, Feb. 28.— (CP)—Board of Education estimates for 1940-41 submitted to the House of Commons today totalled £52,544,573 ($232,723,349), an increase of £902,537 over the amount spent on education in the fiscal year 1939-40.

RUSSIANS THREATEN

Of the Arctic front, where the Finns yesterday disclosed a withdrawal southward to Nautsi, on the Norwegian border about 75 miles below the coast, today's communique said only that "a few enemy aircraft were observed," and "bombs dropped by the enemy caused no appreciable damage."

521 Planes Shot Down.

Finnish sources announced 521 Russian planes have been shot down since the start of the war.

These sources estimated the total value of these planes at 2,500,000,000 Finnish markka ($42,500,000), or five times the Finnish financial losses due to bombings.

The Finns reported 1,310 Russian tanks have been destroyed or captured. Many were said to have been repaired and used by the Finns.

Citizens who contribute jewelry to national air defence funds will be given iron rings in exchange, the Finns announced. The rings will carry the image of a fighting plane.

Meanwhile, Red army troops were reported smashing southward deeper into Finland in the far north while on the Karelian Isthmus war-weary Finns dug in for a dogged stand before the shattered city of Viipuri (Viborg).

Buildings Ablaze.

Observers along the Norwegian border in the north said a new Soviet army offensive had reached Nautsi, some 75 miles south of the Arctic coast, after driving the Finns back eight miles.

Every building in Nautsi was ablaze at the end of a day's vicious fighting both in the air and on the ground.

(A Russian communique early today did not mention the far north offensive but claimed Red army troops occupied thirteen more defensive fortifications on the Karelian Isthmus).

The Russians were reported trying to envelop Viipuri, a battered hulk of a city which once housed 74,000 persons, by attacking across the ice of Viipuri Bay.

Still Retain Big Guns.

The attacks were based on the captured fortress of Voivisto, reports indicated, but Finnish sources said any over-ice manoeuvre could result only in heavy Red losses as the Finns still retain big guns on the jagged west coast which could sweep the bay.

Viipuri has been the object of the Russian invasion since the first days of the war and has been subject to almost continual bombing and shelling for three months.

Intense aerial warfare was reported by both sides.

(The Russian communique said six Finnish planes were shot down.)

The Finns announced yesterday 17 Soviet planes had been destroyed.

Picton Farm Hand Fractures Leg Taking a Dare

Picton, Ont., Feb. 28—(CP)—In full view of pleasure skaters, Hutton Martin, 16-year-old farm hand fell 35 feet from a cross beam in the Picton rink last night and fractured his leg.

Albert Hare, rink manager, said that Martin, on a dare from another boy, climbed a steel rod and started across the rink, hand over hand, by means of an iron rod an inch thick. Martin apparently tired and fell. He landed on his feet with such force that his skates cut a deep hole in the ice.

CONTRACTS AWARDED

Trawler's Captain Risks Life And Puts Out Fire on Deck

Fellow Officers Pepper Away at Two Hun Planes in 20-Minute Battle

ONE PLANE HIT

London, Feb. 28 (CP) — The Aurora, one of four British trawlers attacked by German warplanes yesterday, engaged in a 20-minute machine-gun battle with two of them and drove them off, one with smoke streaming from its tail and losing altitude, it was learned today.

An incendiary bomb and machine-gun fire struck the 225-ton Aurora, out of Aberdeen. Captain Alexander Craig and the chief engineer returned the fire.

One of four bombs rained at the Aurora hit the ship in the bow and started a fire. Disregarding his own danger, the trawler's second engineer grabbed an extinguisher and put out the blaze, while his two fellow officers peppered away at the two planes.

Three Other Trawlers Attacked

The other three trawlers attacked off the northeast coast of Scotland were the Bilsdean, Craigcoilleach and Strathannoch. Although the ships were riddled with machine gun bullets, the Aurora's cook, who was hit in the arm, was the only one wounded in the four attacks.

The Aurora, the 24-ton Bilsdean and the 233-ton Craigcoilleach put into port. The Strathannoch, remained at its fishing post.

The Bilsdean and Craigcoilleach were fishing side by side when they were attacked by a lone German plane. Machine gun bullets swept their decks, but the plane's bombs missed the double target.

Dramatic Story Told

The Aurora's crew had the most dramatic story to tell, of a running 20-minute battle with two raiders.

The trawler was first attacked by a lone bomber, which was soon joined by a second raider. The captain and engineer immediately manned the ship's Lewis gun, but the planes quickly separated and attacked from opposite sides. Since the trawler mounted only one gun, the captain and engineer could deal with but one of the planes at a time.

Three bombs fell wide of the mark, but a fourth hit the bow. The planes made a final dive on the Aurora as the second engineer was fighting the fire, but he escaped unhit.

"One of the planes apparently was hit by our fire," one of the crew said. "It disappeared leaving behind it a trail of smoke and losing considerable altitude."

One bomb fell 30 feet from the Craigcoilleach. Both the Craigcoilleach and Bilsdean were badly scarred by machine gun fire. Another German plane flew over a half hour after they were attacked, but did not attempt to bring them under fire.

FRENCH DOWN 2 GERMAN PLANES

ment said:

"In the course of particularly live aerial operations in the last 48 hours two German planes were downed in France."

Considerable firing by French anti-aircraft batteries was directed at German squadrons which flew over Paris area Monday night. Six Parisians were wounded by one anti-aircraft shell.

The French said both sides had made deep incursions into the other's territory dropping propaganda leaflets. Clearing weather released great numbers of aviation units which had been grounded during the winter.

German planes were particularly active over eastern and northern France, pushing in as far as the Paris region, the French said.

Military dispatches said French artillery on the western front broke up three German patrols yesterday before they got within fighting distance of French outposts east of the Moselle and Saar Rivers and in Alsace.

French artillery also was reported to have shelled heavily the German positions in the Blies valley.

THE ONE DAY IN FOUR YEARS

Bachelors will have to be on the qui vive tomorrow, February 29th. Ordinarily leap year is bad enough at any time for the eligible bachelor fraternity to evade, but tomorrow, the extra day which has been crammed into the leap year, adds a further 24 hour peril to the lives of all good bachelors, who will have to be on their guard, if they hope to hold fast to the sanctity of bachelorhood on February 29th, "that comes once in four".

Plainfield is Undefeated in Rural League

Tweed, Feb. 28 (Special)— The league leading Plainfield boys maintained intact their record of no defeats as the East Hastings Rural Hockey League season ended on Tuesday night at Tweed arena. Finishing the season with four wins and two ties in six starts, they will have a week's respite before they try conclusions with the winners of the semi-finals for the championship of the league to bring to a close the first season of the East Hastings Rural Hockey League.

The opening game saw Farnsworth and Roslin meeting in an exciting tussle to break the three-way second place tie which they shared with Tweed. After sixty minutes of strenuous play the lads from Farnsworth defeated the "southerners" by a score of 4 to 2, giving them undisputed possession of second place. Burleigh opened the scoring for Roslin, getting the only goal of the first period Lajoie knotted the count in the second period while Roslin was held scoreless. Going into the third period with the score tied, both teams opened up to secure the verdict. Chisholm broke the deadlock when he finished a passing attack with Mattis and Bellis. Farnsworth, however, proved too strong for them and ran in three goals from the sticks of R. Palmateer, Lajoie and Meraw to stow the game away 4 to 2.

The second game was a hard-fought battle which brought together the league-leading Plainfield squad and Tweed with the former winning by a score of 4-3. Anxious to maintain their unbeaten record, the visitors went all out in the opening frame and skated Tweed right into the ice. Two clever goals by Parks, star defence man gave Plainfield a substantial lead. This boy Parks displayed some fine skating and stick-handling, his experience in playing hockey in Western Canada a number of years ago making him a standout among his teammates.

The middle stanza showed a complete reversal of form on the part of both teams; Tweed, threatened with a cellar berth to finish the season stampeded Plainfield who became completely disorganized with the result that Tweed ran in three goals without a reply to go out in front. Shanque, Lobb and Cronkwright were the marksmen.

The final period was well advanced before Parks picked up a loose puck, skated through the entire Tweed team to pick a corner and tie the score. With a minute left to play Carleton scored the winning goal for Plainfield giving them their fourth victory of the season. Five penalties were handed out with Tweed drawing three of them.

The play-offs will commence on Thursday night. Plainfield, by virtue of their position, will draw a bye while the other three teams will play off to decide which will contest with the league leaders the honor of winning the league championship. On Thursday night Roslin will play Tweed, the winners taking on Farnsworth, second placers, on Tuesday next. The winners of the semi-finals will meet Plainfield subsequently on a date to be decided upon.

GENERAL DOIHARA REACHES PEIPING

to head a Japanese-controlled government for the occupied portions of China.

The present Peiping Provisional Government is scheduled to be replaced by a semi-autonomous "North China political council" under the Wang Ching-Wei regime.

Furthering the Japanese army's intention of retaining an iron grip on this area, Doihara seeks to win control of this council by undermining the Chinese clique which now nominally manages affairs at Peiping.

Wang Keh-Min, head of the Peiping Provisional Government, apparently losing prestige, due to the imminent departure from Peiping of his chief supporter, Lieut.-General Seiichi Kita, who is going back to active duty after serving on the Asia Development Board.

It is believed Wang Keh-Min will resign soon after a meeting of the Wang Ching-Wei group at Nanking March 6 to complete plans for a new central government tentatively set for establishment March 15.

This will leave the way clear for Doihara's faction to gain ascendancy, provided he can solidify his support within the next two weeks or less.

FOOD RATIONING CARDS DECREED IN FRANCE

Strengthening of Westwall Fortifications by Germany is Reported

Decrees Designed To Decrease Use Of Commodities

Finance Minister Broadcasts to the Nation Explaining the Decrees — France Already Has Meatless Days

CONTROL SPENDING

Food Measures Include Conserving of Bread Flour — Grants to Farmers to Increase Spring Wheat Planting

Paris, Feb. 29 (AP)—The French cabinet today decreed the issuance of food rationing cards.

Other decrees intended to reduce the consumption of oil and alcohol also were signed by President Lebrun as the French girded themselves for a long war.

Finance Minister Paul Reynaud will broadcast to the nation at 7:45 p.m. (1:45 p.m. EST) explaining the decrees.

There are 10 sets in all—designed in general to decrease consumption and spending and to increase production.

A communique issued after a 45-minute cabinet meeting this afternoon announced only the titles of the decrees.

France already has three meatless days a week and on the four other days restaurants are forbidden to serve more than one meat dish a person. Other foods, however, have not been rationed although Great Britain has a rationing system.

Reduce Ordinary Imports

The first decree was entitled "relative to spending abroad" in line with the government's policy of reducing ordinary imports to conserve

Why The Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

Spring floods! Most great floods have occurred in late winter or early spring. Some have occurred in early winter, late spring, or even in summer the latter being a very logical time in one respect, since summer months are often the rainiest of the year. In late winter or early spring, however, there are certain very important factors which conduce to flood conditions: There are no leafy woods or plant cover to intercept or hinder the run-off; evaporation from the ground is much less in winter and spring than in summer; and so it requires about twice as much rain in summer as in winter to cause floods.

ACCUSES BRITISH GOV'T. FAVORING FOREIGN SHIPPING

Sir Phillip Haldin States Higher Rates Being Paid to Foreign Owners Than to British

FUTURE ENDANGERED

London, Feb. 29—(CP)—Sir Phillip Haldin, president of the Chamber of Shipping, told that organization today that British merchant shipping is in a far worse position than in the last war.

He blamed government "indifference," asserting that it is "as plain as a pikestaff" that Great Britain's shrunken mercantile marine will be inadequate at the end of the war without greater government aid.

"This country cannot exist without a strong mercantile marine," Sir Phillip warned.

Noting that Britain is paying higher rates for neutral tonnage than for British ships, thus enabling foreign ship owners to build reserves, he said increased government aid is imperative "now and in the future" or "our mercantile marine will sink to the level of a third-rate power."

Lord Essendon, chairman of Furness, Withy and Co., Ltd., and other shipping firms, said the controlled rate for British ships from the river plate was 43 shillings (about $8.50) a ton while Britain was paying 130 shillings (about $26) to neutral owners for the same service.

"These figures provide some indication of the benefits which foreign ship owners are obtaining and of the strength of the rod which is being created with which to beat British tramp ship owners in the future," he said.

RED AIR RAIDERS VISIT HELSINKI, ARE DRIVEN OFF

Two Attacks Are Beaten Off by Anti-Aircraft Artillery

KARELIAN SITUATION

Red Army Subjects New Positions of Finns to Continued Pressure

Helsinki, Feb. 29 (AP).—The Finnish army's new positions between the Bay of Viipuri and the Vuoski River, on the hard-fought Karelian Isthmus, are being subjected to "continued enemy pressure," the Finnish high command announced today.

The Russian invaders appeared to be trying at all costs to press their newly-gained advantage in efforts to encircle and capture Viipuri, strategis port of the region.

Russian troops also attacked at the other—or eastern—end of the isthmus front in "great force" at Taipale, according to the high command's communique which covered yesterday's action. The communique was unusually brief.

Russian planes meanwhile were sighted over Helsinki today. The capital was subjected to three air alarms up to mid-afternoon.

Helsinki, Feb. 29 (AP).—Helsinki experienced two air raids today, the second starting at 2:15 p.m. (7:15 a.m. EST).

Six planes appeared over the city in the first raid but were driven off by anti-aircraft fire.

(This dispatch was sent from Helsinki just as the second raid was beginning.)

Moscow Claims Advance Made.

Moscow, Feb. 29 (AP).—The Red army pressed on toward Viipuri today, reporting the capture of six additional Finnish towns that brought the Karelian Isthmus drive within four miles of the city.

Finnish forces continued to retreat after unsuccessful counter-attacks that cost them heavy losses, said the Soviet communique.

Forty-two Finnish defensive fortifications were taken yesterday with full data not yet available, the communique said, and added:

"Soviet troops captured the enemy's defensive fortifications on the northern bank of the Salmenkaita River, occupied the town of Ritasaari on the western bank of Vuoski

Recruiting Canadians to Sail Oil Tankers in Belligerent Waters

Montreal, Feb. 28—(CP) — The Montreal Herald says today two United States oil companies are recruiting about 120 Canadian ships' officers and seamen to sail oil tankers through belligerent waters. The recruiting is reported to have been revealed when officers of the Canadian Seamen's Union here admitted they had been approached to obtain the men.

Wages 25 per cent above normal are said to have been offered to the men.

The paper says the effort to recruit crews in Canada is the result of the U.S. government restrictions on trade in belligerent waters. The companies concerned are registering their vessels under the Norwegian and Panama flags to continue shipping high test airplane fuel to Europe, according to the report, and are recruiting Canadian crews because the U.S. Government bans American citizens from certain European areas.

"Since the union has refused to aid in recruiting the seamen in Canada, the U.S. companies are believed to have appointed other agents at Canadian port cities to carry on the campaign," the paper says.

Norway Will Protest Again To Nazis Over Sinking of Steamers

Oslo, Feb. 29—(AP)— Foreign Minister Halvdan Koht announced in Parliament today that Norway would make new representations to Berlin shortly against the sinking of Norwegian steamers.

Koht said the northern countries would support such protests and he hoped other neutral countries would do the same.

He said some 50 Norwegian vessels, representing 2.3 per cent of the Norwegian merchant marine, have been sunk since the war started. He put Norway's loss of life at 350 passengers and sailors.

"It may be stated with certitude," he added, "that at least nine of these vessels were sunk by German war and other ships. In eight cases we have no indication of the nationality of the aggressor vessels. Other Norwegian vessels sank after hitting mines."

Germany Must Stick To Economic Autarchy Nazis' Answer to Hull

Berlin, Feb. 29 (AP).—Nazi sources said today that Germany must stick to economic autarchy—self-sufficiency—so long as Great Britain controls overseas trade lanes through the Royal Navy.

This was their answer to State Secretary Cordell Hull's statement in Washington yesterday that the end of the war should bring the end of autarchy, regimentation and totalitarianism.

With reference to Sumner Welles, expected here Friday on his tour as European investigator for President Roosevelt, the Frankfurter Zeitung declared that "whoever looks around Europe will find a front of autarchist reality."

Nazi sources described regimented economic life as not the choice system but as a necessary means toward independence by reducing imports.

"None of the rebels ever again will agree that individual nations use their liberal formulas together with an alliance of monopolies and naval bases as all strategic centres to establish tyrannical, selfish predominance—in peace or in war, in politics or economy," the Zeitung said.

No Use For Formulas.

"We have no use for formulas and purchases. Therefore, war must decide. British seapower will find its limits, if not end, an autarchic continental power."

In London, Hull's disclosure that American representatives abroad have been instructed to call his objectives to the attention of foreign governments was described unofficially as "an admirable sentiment".

Declaring that "we cannot agree with the definition which recognizes only military, not political neutrality as well," Propaganda Minister Goebbels last night repeated his lecture to non-belligerents on their responsibilities.

"Even in neutral states, the precepts of freedom of opinion may not be misused knowingly and systematically to insult the warring powers," Goebbels said at a mass meeting in Muenster.

"A glaring difference between the neutrality of a state and the neutrality of its public opinion does not exist. To be neutral means to hold one's self out of the conflict in every respect."

First Six Months of War Show Cost in Man Power Light in Comparison With '14

By the Canadian Press

The war between the Allies and Germany is six months old tomorrow but its cost in manpower is light in comparison with the last war at the same stage.

Great Britain, France and Germany, have not yet had to go through what they did in the first six months of the last war. Then:

Germany, Austria-Hungary and Turkey were in on one side, and Britain, France, Belgium, Russia, Japan, Montenegro and Serbia on the other.

Germany had smashed across Belgium and through France to within a few miles of Paris.

The Russians had invaded Germany

Slaughter at Tannenberg and in the first battles of the Marne and Ypres was history.

Japan was seizing German colonies in the Far East, Britain invading them in Africa.

Ships were sunk on the seven seas, three British cruisers going down in one day.

Now, a quarter century later, March 1 makes the present war six months old. Germany invaded Poland on Sept. 1, Great Britain and France declared war on Germany Sept. 3.

In this six months Britain and France have fought a war of attrition against Germany, hemming her in and hurting her economically. So far, Germany also has waited.

Ship Sinkings Greater

In one phase—the war on Allied and neutral merchant shipping—the current conflict is running ahead of the last war, a daily average of about 6,000 tons having been sunk in the past six months as compared with about 4,500 in the last war it was not until 1917 that Germany attempted the unrestricted sea warfare with which she opened this one on the very first day by sinking the Athenia.

Available statistics give the following picture of the war to date:

Paris reports Allied casualties on land—in the spasmodic action on the western front—total about 1,500 killed and 7,500 wounded, with German casualties "slightly higher;" the British Army casualties to Dec. 31 are listed as 40 killed and wounded and 720 dead of accident or disease.

The German invasion of Poland was far more destructive. Hitler listed German casualties there up to Sept. 30, after most of the fighting in Poland was over, as 10,572 killed, 30,322 wounded and 3,404 missing Polish casualties were much higher but indefinite. A

PRIME MINISTER 'CHANGING TUNE' STATES MANION

Quotes Hansard to Show King Would Have Done the Same as Hon. R. B. Bennett Did

SURE OF FIGURES

Claims Statement Regarding Expenses of the War Are Only Half-True

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Feb. 28—(CP)—Conservative leader Manion accused Prime Minister Mackenzie King of "changing his tune" since last September regarding the reduction of defence appropriations during the years of the Conservative regime in Canada from 1930 to 1935, in a speech here last night.

Quotations from Hansard, official record of the House of Commons debate, were used freely by Dr. Manion, as he claimed among other things that the Prime Minister had charged that the defence deteriorated in the Dominion between 1930-35. The Conservative leader said that such had been the case in all peace-loving countries.

SABRE-BEARING POLICE GUARDING FRENCH LEGATION

Hungarian Police Under Orders to Break Up Alleged Traffic in Passports for Czecho-Slovak Refugees

Budapest, Feb. 29 (AP)—Sabre-bearing policemen today guarded exists of the French legation, under orders to break up an alleged traffic in French passports for Czecho-Slovak refugees — orders reported to have been issued by Hungary under German pressure.

The police maintained an all-night vigil around the four-storey building they said 40 refugees were harbored. Callers at the legation were questioned and automobiles leaving the inner courtyard were searched.

An inquiry at the legation brought the answer that no one at the moment was authorized to discuss the situation.

Hungarian officials were understood to have told the French Minister, Pierre Guerlets, that so long as the passport traffic endangers Hungary's neutrality, in the German view, the police watch would not be relaxed.

German Says Nazi 'Secret Weapon' May be 'Horrible Bacterial War'

New York, Feb. 29 (CP)— Adolf Hitler's "secret weapon" may be a "horrible bacterial warfare that Hitler might not hesitate to unleash when he finds himself at bay," Dr. Martin Gumpert, former head of the Berlin city dispensary for deformity diseases, said here today.

A refugee from Nazi Germany, Dr. Gumpert quoted in an interview excerpts from an official German army journal published in September, 1939, which he said discussed the possibilities of unleashing disease-laden germs upon the civil populations in France and Great Britain.

"As crazy as it sounds, Hitler has been experimenting with this method of warfare," said Dr. Gumpert, who since 1936 has been a practising physician in New York. "Diseases such as tularemia, for which there is no possibility of treatment or vaccination, could be spread by dropping refrigerated flies and lice by airplane."

But the author of "Heil Hunger!" a study of health conditions in the Reich under Nazi dictatorship, said if Hitler resorts to such means of warfare as "a last desperate fling," Germany itself ultimately would suffer more than the Allies. "A war of disease would soon prove a boomerang to Germany, the country most susceptible to it," he said.

In "Heil Hunger!" Dr. Gumpert cites official German statistics "to destroy the legend of the power-radiating propaganda healthfulness of the Third Reich and to expose it as the propaganda lie which it is." In his opinion, the incidence of disease in Germany has more than trebled under seven years of Hitlerism and the people "have reached the limit of their physical and psychic working capacity."

Dr. Gumpert foresaw a "general breakdown next winter if war really starts this spring or summer." For when war broke out last September the German people "had already been at war for seven years."

Born in Berlin in 1897, Dr. Gumpert served with the German army in the first Great War. He studied medicine at Heidelberg and Berlin universities, graduating in 1923. From 1927 to 1933 he headed the Berlin dispensary for deformity diseases and lectured in two German schools for social hygiene. "Heil Hunger!" is the latest of a number of books on German health he has written in recent years. He was forced to flee Germany in 1936.

Increased Activity By German Troops Along Frontiers

High German Army Authorities Reported to Have Inspected Military Works Near Luxembourg Border

INCREASE LABOR CAMPS

Some Shelters Which Could Not be Occupied in Recent Cold Weather Are Now Being Reoccupied—Less Activity Noted Over Border From Belgium

Amsterdam, Feb. 29 (AP). — Increased activity by German troops was observed today at various points along the Luxembourg and Netherlands frontiers.

The significance of the troop movements was not clear, but there were indications the Germans are pushing the job of strengthening the westwall fortifications.

Reports from Eupen, Belgium, told of a visit of high German army authorities to inspect military works and augmented labor camps across the frontier.

From Luxembourg came reports of greater activity noted in the Moselle valley. With the coming of milder weather, new barracks are said to be springing up almost overnight.

Shelters May Be Reoccupied.

It was also believed that some of the shelters which could not be lived in in the recent cold weather now are being reoccupied.

Across the Netherlands frontier work is continuing on military projects carefully shielded from inspection. While the extent of these operations is not definitely known they have not reached the elaborate scale of the westwall fortifications, which extend to the Netherlands border.

FREIGHT TRAIN PLOUGHS INTO STANDING TRAIN

Hamilton, Feb. 29 —(CP)— A through freight train ploughed into the rear of a standing passenger train at Caledonia Station shortly before noon today. No one was injured.

Only one person was aboard the passenger train at the time of the collision. A railway employee, whose name was not learned, was working in the baggage car. The baggage car was practically demolished.

The rear passenger coach was tossed high onto the front of the engine of the freight. The impact caused an express car on the opposite end to telescope the baggage car.

The freight was enroute from Brantford to Black Rock near Buffalo.

There was no locomotive attached to the passenger train.

AACHEN BAKERS ORDERED TO GET 3 MONTHS' SUPPLY

Belgians Who Work in Germany Said to Have Been Told Border is to be Closed

TRANSPORT PROBLEMS

Eupen, Belgium, Feb. 29 —(CP)— Havas News Agency today quoted usually reliable sources as stating the German-Belgian and German-Netherlands frontiers are to be closed on the Reich side beginning tomorrow.

Residents of the German town of Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle) who asked for permits to cross the border were informed by German police that there would be little use in getting such cards "in view of the forthcoming closing of the frontiers," Havas was informed.

Men in the eastern districts of Belgium who go to Germany daily to work have been told they will not be able to cross the border after tomorrow, according to the same sources.

Reports at Aachen

It was also learned that bakers in Aachen and the surrounding district have been ordered to put in supplies of flour sufficient for three months, in view of transport difficulties.

About 1,00 residents of the Belgian industrial city of Verviers, 12 miles from the German border, have evacuated the city in the past month, it is reported. Woollen manufacturers in Verviers have begun to move their stocks, and in some cases their machinery, to Tourain. Belgian authorities have advised them that the trains needed for moving the material would not be available later if serious events occur.

FLOODS THREATEN TO BREAK LEVEES

Two Towns Practically Submerged and 4,000 Estimated Homeless

San Francisco, Feb. 29 (AP).—The crest of a northern California flood moved southward along the Sacramento River today, leaving a trail of inundated towns and ranches and threatening to burst levees down-river.

Two towns were practically submerged, many others had inundated sections, two persons were dead, thousands of acres of farm lands were under water and more than 4,000 persons were estimated homeless.

In Sacramento, Meteorologist E. H. Fletcher said he had been informed levees at Princeton and Butte City might go out, spreading water over new areas.

The towns of Gerber and Tehama were nearly covered by flood waters. The 500 residents of Gerber and 300 at Tehama had to abandon their homes.

North of the stricken towns the river was falling. The weather bureau here forecast clear or clearing weather for the immediate future after four days of heavy rains.

Sees Complications for U. S. in Proposed Waterway Pact

New York Economist Opposes Proposed Treaty as Engaging New York in Huge Power Electric Business

Albany, N.Y., Feb. 29—(AP)—The proposed St. Lawrence Waterway and Power Treaty with Canada was represented by Harrison Wheaton, New York economist, as threatening international complications for the United States.

The pact's consummation also would engage New York State in a huge Hydro-Electric power business, Wheaton, former executive manager of the New York State Waterways Conference Committee, said in an address prepared for delivery at a mass meeting of treaty opponents.

"Signature to the proposed treaty will definitely tie us up with a belligerent in the current conflict in Europe," Wheaton declared. "Would it not be the height of folly to enter into an arrangement in perpetuity with a nation at war to construct, maintain, operate and defend a joint project of this magnitude?"

Opponents Active

Albany, N.Y., Feb. 29—(AP)—New York State opponents of the proposed St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty urged today speedy approval by the State Legislature of proposals for a committee study to determine whether the waterway is "justified."

A resolution adapted at a mass meeting asserted the project "threatens the economic security of labor, transportation and industry in both the United States and Canada" and added: "Any alliance with Canada, a belligerent country, in this period of the war would not be in accordance with the spirit of neutrality which the United States must maintain."

Two proposals for a study of the project are before the law-makers.

Earlier, Harrison H. Wheaton, former executive manager of the New York State waterways conference committee, told the group the treaty threatens international complications for the United States and the pact's consummation would engage this state in a huge Hydro-Electric power business.

CORY ATTACKS METHOD USED BY 'MACHINE'

Is Chief Speaker at Organization Meeting of Independent Liberals Held at Tweed

Tweed, Feb. 29 (Special)—Tweed independent Liberals held their re-organization meeting in the Opera House on Wednesday night with the candidate Mr. Harry Cory of Trenton as their principal speaker. Counter attractions resulted in a small crowd in which there was a sprinkling of the fair sex.

Mr. Felix Rashotte acting as chairman, spoke of the lack of harmony in the ranks of the Liberals in the riding of South Hastings which he laid at the shoulders of those whom he described as a group of dictators, who wished to keep full control of the situation in their own hands regardless of the wishes of others. He claimed that the Liberal Association of the riding was not a legal one owing to its failure several years ago and subsequently each December to hold a re-organization meeting as required by the Liberal constitution. The result has been to set up two distinct Liberal organizations within the riding each of which is supporting a separate candidate. He urged the electors who were present to support the candidature of Mr. Cory whom he described as the official and properly chosen candidate of the Liberal party.

Trenton Speaker Heard

Mr. Irvin McGaughey of Trenton, secretary of the Trenton Liberal Association also charged that the Liberal "machine" held office illegally and of unfair distribution of patronage only to those Liberals, who meekly came under their domination. In this connection he said, that many such had been denied employment at Trenton airport. He questioned the legality of the manner in which delegates to the Liberal convention held recently in Belleville were chosen, claiming that according to the constitution they should be elected by the voters rather than appointed by the ward chairman. Mr. McGaughey considered it an honour to have nominated Mr. Cory as the party standard-bearer and predicted that he would sweep the riding and expose the operations of the machine." "I have nothing but respect for Mr. 'Mack' Haig," he said, "but he has only stepped out of the ranks of the Conservative party, where he rightly belongs, directly in the jaws of the "machine" of Liberal dictators and he is going to be a sorry man on March 26th."

Charge is Made

Mr. Tommy Mason of Belleville, also spoke briefly. He claimed great dissatisfaction was felt by the true Liberals of the riding that the delegates to the convention were not constitutionally chosen, and urged his hearers to "get rid of this group of dictators and send Harry Cory, a real Liberal to Ottawa."

Other speakers were Mr. W. Turner and Mr. George Matthews of Belleville. The former expressed the opinion that Harry Cory should have been the Liberal candidate in 1935, but stepped down and assisted in electing another Liberal. "This time," he said, "we are asked to support a Conservative to represent the Liberals. Let us elect Harry Cory and send a true Liberal to Ottawa." Mr. Matthews also urged strong support of the candidate.

Mr. Cory did not speak at any great length as he said he would at a later date discuss the issues confronting the electors. He said that he was running as an independent Liberal candidate for reasons as set forth by those who preceded him on the platform. It had gone against the grain he said to have that little Tammany Hall of Bridge Street go outside of the Liberal ranks and bring in a Conservative to a packed convention and foist him on the delegates. "This machine is not only dictating the policies of Liberalism in South Hastings," said Mr. Cory, "but it has also reached the point where it says to a man: 'You do this or else'—the 'or else' meaning 'you don't get a job.' Your boys are fighting dictatorship in Europe but we have to fight right here in the riding against dictator methods."

Mr. Cory referred to extensive building operations about to be undertaken at Trenton airport to accommodate airmen coming there for training. He offered the opinion that in 30 days there will not be enough men in South Hastings for this work and advised those who wanted work to register at the Provincial office in Belleville.

In conclusion Mr. Cory stated that his interests had always been with the working man and if elected as Liberal member of the riding he would make the interests of all electors his own. The following officers were elected: Poll chairman No. 2 poll — Frank McConachie; Treasurer—Jas. Gabourie.

TWEED TEAM TIES BATA 4-4

Last Game of Trent Valley Schedule Sees Bata Six Come From Behind

Tweed and Bata divided the points after ten minutes of overtime in the final game of the season on local ice. The score of 4-4 fairly represents the relative strength of the two teams on the night's play. Tweed, still without the services of Wagar, who has been ill, was rather lucky in getting the tying goal, which came with one second remaining in the final frame.

In the opening stanza the locals threatened to pile up a record score as they tallied three times while holding Bata scoreless. Tummon, who has been long overdue in his scoring efforts finally broke the jinx and putting on one of his spectacular corkscrew rushes bulged the twine on a beautiful shot. Courneyea from Elsbury and Marsh from Elsbury gave the locals their second and third tallies. Bata tried some effective combination plays but ran into a stone-wall defence, finding Reeves unbeatable in goal. Leal drew the only penalty of the period.

The second frame was scoreless, although both teams missed frequently.

In the concluding stanza Bata ran wild cutting down the locals' apparently safe margin goal by goal until they finally knotted the count at 3-all. Two of their goals were directly traceable to loose defensive work on the part of Tweed setting up the opposing attackers for shots at point-blank range with Reeves completely helpless. The visitors went into the lead on a bounding shot which hopped over Reeve's stick into the net. Despite strenuous efforts by Tweed they saw the minutes ticked off with every attempt to score being frustrated by excellent work by Bata goalie. In this scoring spree Reid tallied twice with Guay and Foster securing the other counters. Finally with but seconds remaining Courneyea broke through and tied the score at 4-4.

There was no further scoring in the overtime.

No Shortage of Seed Potatoes Indicated

As was expected following the reduction in price of potatoes by vendors on the city market a few weeks ago, there is no shortage of seed potatoes in this district, a prominent Front Street dealer said today. Prices, he added, will be at approximately the same levels as those of a year ago, and if any change is noted at all, it will be of the nature of a decrease.

Inquiries are already trickling in for seed from farmers of the various districts, he said, but reports from his sources of supply indicate that there will be more than enough to satisfy the local demand.

"One grower, from whom I generally buy a large quantity of potatoes, was in the city Saturday," he said, "and informed me that he had seven hundred bags of seed potatoes on hand, and ready for sale. Other growers report a plentitude, so farmers of this district need not worry about not securing sufficient supplies for their needs."

This immediate district is not primarily a seed-potato producing community, he said, but a few farmers have enough seed for their own requirements. However, the producing districts report plenty of stock on hand, and in fact some growers are thinking of exporting their surplus stocks to other parts of the province.

Past and Present Air Training Schemes Providing Campaign Ammunition for Both Sides

(By The Canadian Press)

Past and present air training schemes provide campaign ammunition for both the government and opposition parties as the election drive moves into high gear.

The Liberals uphold the British commonwealth air training plan as a major contribution by Canada to the Allies' war effort while the Conservatives charge that the government made a grave error in not allowing Britain to establish her own schools here two years ago when negotiations first were opened.

M. A. MacPherson of Regina, continuing his Ontario tour, spoke at Barrie, Ont., last night and renewed the Conservative criticism. He said the present war effort was delayed because Canada did not fall in line with the 1937 air plan and it is "high time we put somebody in office who will play ball with Britain."

At Sault Ste. Marie, Conservative Leader Manion also mentioned the old air training plan and criticized the government's part in these negotiations between Canada and Britain. So-called Canadian co-operation in this regard was a "complete piece of farce and humbug."

Generous Chunks Quoted

Generous chunks of Hansard reports of the debate in the House of Commons were cited by Dr. Manion in a general reply to the Winnipeg speech by Prime Minister Mackenzie King.

First, Dr. Manion accused the Prime Minister of "changing his tune" since last September regarding the reduction of defences in 1930-36 and quoted Hansard to support his accusation.

Secondly, he accused the Prime Minister of telling his Winnipeg audience "half the truth" about the amount spent on defence between 1935 and the outbreak of war.

The government's waste of public money "must run into millions of dollars and every taxpayer should realize that to vote for a Mackenzie King candidate is to put the stamp of approval on this sort of thing," Hon. H. H. Stevens, National Government candidate in Kootenay East, said at Kamloops, B.C. He spoke in a 30-minute address over the National network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Gross Negligence Charged

"Parliament was denied the right to review the actions of the administration or to examine into war purchases or supplies—a right which it was assured would be given when it unanimously granted the government supplies of money in the war session last September—yet there is ample evidence of gross negligence in the expenditure of the taxpayers' money."

Mr. Stevens said land has been purchased from friends of the government at from three to 10 times its assessed value. Contractors have been paid huge sums for rental of equipment "which they and everyone else know is excessive."

The record of the King Government for the past five years is a succession of one failure after another, he continued. "If it was not actually a failure then it was an evasion of responsibility. Since the outbreak of war the administration has been marked by a degree of hopeless incompetence and grave dereliction of duty unparalleled in Canadian history."

Judging from the manner in which war purchases were being handled, it was clear that by national unity the Prime Minister meant a united Canada under the domination of the Liberal party. Patronage characterized the administration both before and since the outbreak of war.

Relief Measures Criticized

"In relief administration, in the granting of war contracts, in the purchase of supplies and now in the enforcement of criminal law by order-in-council we have a picture of what we may expect from a 'one party' system of government.

"Gone with the wind is all semblance of fair dealing in the expenditure of public money. No longer is relief to be granted on a basis of need but according to party affiliation. The ancient right of a man to be tried by his peers is to be jettisoned and his liberty to be in the gift of a political minister. Such is indeed the drift of this incompetent yet cunning administration."

During the regular 1939 session in parliament, three separate acts were passed which violated "the sacred principle of responsible government" in which absolute power was given the agriculture minister to extend or vary the acts by or through regulations and in utter disregard of parliament, Mr. Stevens said.

Revenue Minister Heard

A National Government such as proposed by Conservative leader Manion "would not be capable of giving leadership to a United Canada," Revenue Minister Ilsley said at Halifax in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

"The diversity of view in a Manion government would cripple it from the outset," Mr. Ilsley said. "Canada needs a united government in time of war."

It was safe to say a Marion cabinet would contain "no Liberals of any standing." If it consisted of Conservatives, Co-operative Commonwealth Federation representatives, Social Crediters or New Democracy exponents, it would be "the worst type of government the country could possibly have, far worse than a government representing any one faction."

Dissension Rife is Claim

"Dissenion would be rife," the Minister said. "For example, the C.C.F. is against the sending of troops overseas; New Democracy is for conscription. Imagine the scene at the council table of Canada!"

He listed four ways in which a Manion government would "suffer by comparison with the government now in power." It would, he contended, be less experienced, less united, more "erratic" and would not be "as fair to all persons and parties" as the King administration.

The Dominion government has betrayed the people of western Canada by its wheat policy since elected in 1935, M. J. Coldwell, National Chairman of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, charged at Lacombe, Alta.

If a western farmer voted Liberal in the March 26 Federal election after the way the Mackenzie King government had "betrayed him, he ought to have his head examined," Mr. Coldwell said.

Opposed to Conscription

The National Chairman said the C.C.F. was opposed to conscription and also to a National Government and charged Prime Minister Mackenzie King had been afraid to reveal the government's actions in Parliament before an election.

A "great outcry" had been raised against the export of wheat to Russia but export permits had been issued for export of nickel and scrap iron to Japan.

Early last month, 13 carloads of nickel and one of scrap iron had been shipped to Japan. Premier Hepburn, of Ontario had raised a "great outcry" against shipment of wheat to Russia but meanwhile "his mining friends" were sending nickel to Japan and nothing was heard about it.

Wheat Policy Criticized

Criticizing the government's wheat policy, Mr. Coldwell stated that on Dec. 4, 1935, it had dismissed a wheat board which had the confidence of western Canada as well as dismissing the advisory committee of western farmers, and appointed in its place a board including James R. Murray, a former secretary of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange.

Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Federal Minister of Agriculture, had contended that wheat could be raised at a cost of 30 to 40 cents a bushel but a Saskatchewan University survey had showed only one per cent of farmers could produce wheat at such a cost, he said.

The effect of Mr. Gardiner's speech has been that people in eastern Canada think western farmers are being given 60 cents a bushel for wheat they can produce for 40 cents.

Against National Government

"It is one of the greatest betrayals of Western Canada ever committed by a Minister from the West," Mr. Coldwell charged.

Voicing opposition to a National Government, he charged the movement for a National Government had been instituted by a "very powerful group of financiers" who wanted to solve their problems, particularly the railway question, in their own way and load the people of Canada with a huge debt.

A National Government would not make prosecution of war its sole aim, he predicted, the C.C.F. had never considered it worth while to co-operate with another party to turn out a government and put in its place another government just like it. "We want to change the system."

Murdoch A. MacPherson former Attorney-General of Saskatchewan, told a National Government campaign meeting at Barrie, Ont., that Canada would have benefited considerably more from the commonwealth air training scheme if Prime Minister Mackenzie King had accepted in 1937 the British government's proposals for training airmen in the Dominion.

Mr. MacPherson said the present war effort was delayed by the fact Canada did not fall in line with the air plan in 1937 and he said it was "high time we put somebody in office who will play ball with Britain."

"If we had started with this Empire training scheme in 1937 we would have been manufacturing those planes here and have kept our dollars in Canada, instead of seeing them go across the line to the United States," Mr. MacPherson said, charging Mr. Mackenzie King had shown he "wouldn't trust Britain."

No Wonder You Are Constipated!

What do you eat for breakfast? Coffee, toast, maybe some eggs? What do you eat for lunch and dinner? Bread, meat, potatoes? No wonder you're constipated . . . due to lack of "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean the amount you eat. It means the kind of food that forms a soft, bulky mass in the bowels. It's this mass that helps your bowels move.

The common sense thing to do about it is to eat Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast. This ready-to-eat cereal will give you just the "bulk" you need. And it gives you, in addition, Nature's intestinal-tonic, vitamin B_1. Eat a generous portion of All-Bran every day, drink plenty of water; and life will be brighter for you! All-Bran is made by Kellogg in London, Canada. Sold by every grocer.

After supper ma said to pop, For goodness sakes smile, Willyum, you seem to be off in a perfect blue streak.

I'm sattisfied with it, pop said. The great advantage of living in a free country is that you dont have to crack your face into a series of hippocritical smiles when you prefer to allow it to remain relaxed in its own naturel creases, he said, and ma said, Why Willyum, I'm sure I dont want you to belie your own feelings, in fact that's just the very point, I want you to really feel cheerful, just as nature intended.

Who said she did? pop said. What's the first spontaneous sound made by a newborn child? Is it a cackle of joy at being ushered, at somebody elt's expense into the best of all possible worlds? No, it's a howl of complaint at being the uninvited guest to a vale of tears, he said, and ma said, Perhaps you'll cheer up at the welcome sound of some good news, we dont have to go around to the Hewses and play bridge this evening after all, because I called off the engagement.

Well, now that's something like it, that's what I call the glimmer of a silver lining, that makes me almost glad I was born, why didn't you tell me long ago? pop said, and ma said, Because I was saving it till it would do the most good and you cant deny I was right, why you're positively beeming.

But wait, just a moment, I dont remember any bridge date with the Hewses tonight, in fact Yewstace Hews is still out of town, isn't he? pop said, and ma said, Of course he is, but you feel better, and that's the main consideration, isn't it?

And she made him take her to a movie to prove he wasn't feeling worse again.

GREATEST OF BATTLE FLEETS

The British navy is shortly to be joined by the five new battleships which will make the battle fleet of sixteen battleships with large destroyers the most powerful that ever was built in history.

Right Hon. Winston Churchill indicated in no doubtful terms the superiority of the British navy in capital ships over the enemy. These heavy battleships have been a bulwark of defence in the Nazi sea warfare.

Mr. Churchill declared these great ships with the others have achieved a great deal in keeping back the enemy ships in harbors. If the enemy should come out, Mr. Churchill said the British ships would engage them in battle and destroy them for the British have superiority in capital ships.

BRITISH SHIPPING IMPROVING

While British shipping is the butt of the attack of the Nazis, the losses sustained in the present war do not approach those which were suffered in the First Great War. The net loss to Britain has so far been about 200,000 tons since the war started in September as against 450,000 tons sunk in the one month of April 1917. The 200,000-ton loss so far in the present struggle is out of a total of 21,000,000 tons or less than one per cent of the strength of British shipping.

Mr. Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, stated the other day that British shipping is improving.

One point in his address was very favorable. It referred to the losses sustained by the German submarines, which are high and which losses have been very heavy of late. With this is the fact that the First Lord believes that not more than ten new submarines were put into service by the Germans in the first four months of this war. If this is true then the Germans are not building nearly as rapidly the replacements they were anxious to claim they could build. To carry on the submarine war, Germany must replace her destroyed U-boats as well as she can and train crews, one of the problems for any nation which has had heavy losses. Stories have been going about that Germany had a plan for quick training of crews for the U-boats but little credit is given to that.

That Britain still controls the seas is shown by the estimate by Mr. Churchill that well over four-fifths of the peace-time average of of British sea commerce the past three years has been passing into British harbors in spite of all the opposition the German Nazis can bring to bear upon the British navy, auxiliary ships and the merchant marine.

KIPLING HOME NATIONAL SHRINE

The Sussex home of the late Rudyard Kipling becomes a national shrine. Britons will always cherish the memory of the modern day writer who summed up in his works so much the spirit of the Britirh Empire and whose vision was so keen as he foresaw the menace which has now borne fruit in war started by Hitler. Kipling had warned Britain of the day when the German Government would strike for domination.

The old home where the Kiplings lived during their latter years was built at the beginning of the seventeenth century. It bears all the marks of the stability of Merrie England which still shows in her people whose spirit Kipling put into his tales and poetry.

It remains as a sturdy memorial of the man Kipling as it does of the spirit of its builders.

A nation which has such shrines will be preserved against all destructive influences. It is a happy nation which has shrines for the spirit they represent hold it steadfast in the hour of testing.

INVENTIVE AGE

This is an inventive age. It is natural with seeing so many devices which make for human comfort that men should ever be on the lookout for ideas in utensils and objects which will help mankind.

A collapsible office for the trenches is the most modern. War has always needed something of this kind and it has remained for Corporal Lefebvre of the corps of the military staff clerks at Ottawa to invent an office. No official consideration has been given the new office but it is on display in the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa. It is an entire office but for the filing cabinets, packed into a box, roughly, 22 inches by 32 inches by 20 inches. When the lid of the packing case is removed it becomes a notice board calculated to bring joy to any orderly-room sergeant on front line duty. Drop legs are set in position and the packing case assumes the height of a standard desk. The ends unhook and when lowered give a desk of working space of 20 inches by 60 inches. A typewriter can be fitted into the "office."

Hunt Buffalo In Ontario

Buffalo hide coats and buffalo steak for eastern Canadians from Ontario buffalo. This is what's envisioned by the Ontario Department of Game and Fisheries for the future. And it is by no means a pipe dream. Recently, a herd of 25 buffalo brought in from one of the Crown game preserves in Alberta was released in a 35,000-acre corral near Burwash, Ontario.

The animals were purchased on a barter basis. Ontario abounded in black bass but it had no buffalo. With Alberta it was vice versa. So a carload of 300 adult small-mouthed black bass from Ontario lakes was exchanged for the carload of Alberta buffalo.

The establishment of the buffalo herd is only a part of Ontario's plan to increase the variety of game animals in the province. The program was started in November, 1932, when, with the co-operation of the National Parks branch of the Federal Department of the Interior, a carload of 25 elk was shipped from Wainwright, Alberta, and released in the Pembroke Crown game preserve, roughly 100 miles northwest of Ottawa.

x x x

Prior to 1932 there were no elk in Ontario, with the exception of a few in the northwestern portion of the province. Though they were once numerous in the neighboring Province of Manitoba, for some reason they did not migrate very far eastward. This was probably due to the rocky terrain in the valleys and coulees between the rugged hills which made winter food scarce and travelling difficult. With excellent grazing grounds available further east — during both summer and winter — the experiment of elk raising was launched with success.

Following the shipment of the first elk herd, six additional carloads were freighted in, which brought the total number of animals to 172. These were taken to the government industrial farm at Burwash and the Tashota and Chapleau game preserves. To prevent the animals from straying away and to enable the government to keep a check on their annual increase, strong fences were erected around several hundred acres of forest and grass land in each of the preserves.

Has the experimennt been justified? It is evident that it has. A recent survey showed that the various herds have almost trebled their number. So confident did the government become in the ability of the elk to look after themselves in their new environment that last summer the animals were liberated from their corrals. Several hundred were removed to Algonquin Park, to Bruce Peninsula, to Nipigon-Onaman and Goulais River-Ranger Lake preserves, and to Beausoleil Island on Georgian Bay.

Today, the elk roam freely through the wilds of Ontario. Many big game hunters during the last hunting season encountered elk when on the trail of moose and deer.

At the rate elk are increasing there is every possibility that the present generation of hunters will see the day when this majestic animal will be included in the legal game bag when the hunting season rolls around. The hunting days of the early Canadian pioneers will be re-lived by tomorrow's sportsmen.

x x x

Possibly the most important step taken by the Ontario Government in game restoration is the mass production of pheasant. The plan is not intended to supplant nature, but rather to help her out by keeping the pheasant population from falling below normal. Such a decrease is quite inevitable when it is considered that during the three-day pheasant season last October approximately 150,000 were bagged by hunters.

Not wishing to spoil the hunter's fun by bringing about another closed season on this tasty game bird, the Department of Game and Fisheries is encouraging the breeding of pheasant by chicken ranchers. Last spring it sold several thousand eggs, at a very low price, to farmers in the Toronto district. The farmers hatched the eggs in chicken incubators, reared the young pheasant chicks in electric or oil-burning brooders and, after they were mature enough to be released, sold them back to the Government. In 1939 thirty thousand birds were secured by the province in this way and distributed in several game covers.

A number of chicken farmers have found pheasant rearing for the Government so profitable that they have entirely given up the raising of the barnyard variety of bird for the game species. Three of the largest pheasant farms in the province are located at Codrington, Normandale and Kirkfield.

By far the most abundant and popular variety of pheasant in Ontario is the English ring-necked type. Old-time nimrods will recall that at one time these birds were as rare here as pearls in clam shells. There is no existing record of when they were first introduced into the province, but a musty governmental report, dated 1895, refers to them. It reads in part: "Some ardent sportsmen have introduced the Mongolian pheasant and also the English pheasant, but sufficient time has not yet elapsed in which to test the success of the experiment."

The then vague experiment by far-seeing sportsmen is today bearing a heavy yield. To what extent this prolific winged crop has developed may be determined from the result of the annual shoot on Pelee Island —the pheasant hunters' paradise of southwestern Ontario.

x x x

A tightly closed season, it is generally believed, is the most effective game restorative. This may be so with big game animals, but is not the case with ruffed grouse or partridge, says a high official of the Ontario Department of Game and Fisheries who has studied the ways of these birds for many years.

"It is not man who kills off partridge," he claims. "Nature is responsible for their disappearance. Like the rabbit and leming, they have their low and high peaks—usually every ten years. Up to 1923 partridge was plentiful. In 1924 they disappeared but started coming back a couple of years later. By 1930 they reached their top increase.

"I was up in Northern Ontario that year where partridge hunters never ventured. The woods were thick with pin and sharp tail grouse — millions of them in great flocks. Never having seen man before they were so tame it would have been an easy matter to knock them over with a stick. The Government waited until 1932 to open the season, but by that time they were again on the decrease.

"When I returned to that section of the province in 1935 I couldn't find a single partridge. Where had they disappeared to? Why? It certainly couldn't have been hunters for none ever came there. I could only come to one conclusion — communicable disease which came periodically and wiped them out.

"A closed season, however, helps in that it brings about the peak of increase a year or two nearer in the more settled areas."

In 1933 partridge was again on the increase. Once more it became a common sight to see them bordering the highways as one drove along in a car. The woods again echoed with the drumming of their wings.

That year the provincial government passed an order-in-council declaring an open season on grouse in certain parts of the province. Last year hunters were treated to another open season—from October 9 to 14 inclusive—with a bag limit of five birds a day and a total of 15 for the whole season.

Next year the hunting again promises to be good, but in another two or three years Dame Nature is expected to exact again her toll of the partridge ranks.

Xray Treatment of Severe Goitre

Despite the fact that patients with severe type of goitre can now undergo operation in their own town or nearby city, there are a number who fear operation and still others with complications which prevent surgical treatment. It is in these cases that Xray and radium treatment have proved successful in the majority of cases.

Drs. Jacob R. Fried, and Henry Goldberg, New York, in the New York State Journal of Medicine, report their results of this Xray treatment in 58 cases of the severe type of goitre.

After outlining the Xray method used weekly for a number of months the following results are given.

Of the 58 cases, 31 were either controlled or greatly improved, 4 were moderately improved, and the number of failures was 8.

The group includes a rather large number of cases with severe complications, most of whom were at the same time severely toxic (poisoned)but also a fair number of rather mild cases.

There were 5 cases in which the symptoms returned after being free of symptoms from 1 1-2 to 3 years, occurring under circumstances of severe working conditions combined with personal difficulties.

The basal metabolism rate (rate at which the body processes work), which was an average of 65 above normal at the onset shows a decided drop with the first course of treatment—down to 33 above normal. Additional treatment lowers it further but the final level remains at about 23 above normal. After further treatment the rate got down to, or slightly above, normal in many cases.

Drs. Fried and Goldberg state that while Xray treatment cannot match the brilliant results obtained by surgery, in certain cities, nevertheless it helps a large group of patients such as the following: cases refused operation by the surgeon because of a complicating disease, extreme toxicity (poisoning from infected overactive thyroid), advanced age, and patients who refuse operation, those who failed to obtain results from operation.

A trial period of four months of Xray treatment should determine definitely the value of this method of treatment in any given case.

9 GERMANS TAKEN OFF ASMA MARU GIVEN TO JAPAN

Brought Into Japanese Water by British Auxiliary Cruiser Kanimbla

CAPTURED ON JAN. 21

Yokohama, Feb. 29—(CP Havas)—Nine of the 21 Germans taken off the liner Asama Maru by a British warship on Jan. 21 were handed back to Japanese authorities in a transfer at sea off this port today.

The nine men were brought into Japanese waters by the British auxiliary cruiser Kanimbla, which dropped anchor off Yokohama at 7 a.m. An hour later Yoshitaro Yamada, chief of the European section of the foreign office, accompanied by Captain D. N. C. Tufnell, the British naval attache, and several foreign office officials, set out in a launch and took the nine Germans aboard a few minutes after reaching the Kanimbla's side.

The party returned to port at 10.10 a.m. The nine Germans were taken to the harbor master's office where their passports were examined.

Not Permitted to Talk

The Germans were not permitted to talk to any one until formalities were completed. It was understood that the Japanese intended to turn them over to the German Consul General, who has made arrangements to accommodate them at a hotel.

The Kanimbla left Yokohama at 10:30 a.m., steaming away southward.

The 21 Germans were seized by a British warship which stopped the Asama Maru 35 miles off the Japanese coast on Jan 21. The men were taken because they were eligible for military service and were en route to Germany.

Japan Protested Act

Japan protested the act and the British Government replied reiterating its right to prevent men of military age from proceeding to service in Germany's armed forces. Negotiations were begun in Tokyo by Ambassador Sir Robert Craigie and resulted in a compromise under which Britain agreed to return nine of the men and the Japanese agreed to have their steamship lines avoid carrying Germans liable to seizure.

Orders to this effect have already been given by the ocean-going Japanese lines and have been extended to the services maintained between Japan and the Asiatic mainland.

While it had been generally hoped that this arrangement closed the matter, the Japanese Foreign Office spokesman told correspondents yesterday that Japan was still demanding the return of the remaining 12 men.

Sweden's Gold

The Swedish Parliament's action in restricting rigidly the export of gold, drafts or bank notes, is obviously a protective measure. Its primary purpose is the conservation of Sweden's gold. The ordinance, indeed, is in this respect not as sweeping as our own "Gold Reserve Act" of 1934, and no change in the New York exchange rate on Sweden has followed it.

Undoubtedly, one motive for the Swedish measure—which may be imitated by Norway and Denmark—was to prevent, in case of recurrent international crisis, a panicky drain on the nation's gold. In 1938, Sweden contributed $60,000,000 gold to the $1,979,000,000 which came to the United States. During the greater part of 1939, very little came from that country, but in December and last month we imported $36,300,000 from Sweden, and "flight of capital" has since then continued and probably increased. While the Swedish central bank reported barely $10,000,000 decrease in its gold reserve for the month ending Jan. 15, its account of "gold not held in the reserve" decreased twice as rapidly. Possibly, also, the Swedish Government had in mind the risk under present circumstances of ocean transport for exported gold.

The contrast between this action and the action taken by Sweden regarding gold in the World War is certainly curious. In a way, it illustrates the contrast in the position occupied, then and now, by the Scandinavian neutrals. On Feb. 8, 1916, the Swedish Riksdag enacted a law empowering the national bank to refuse gold bullion on deposit, and authorizing the Swedish Mint to refuse delivery of gold coin against tender of gold bullion. The recognized reasons for that action were that Sweden, which as a neutral was driving a prosperous trade with the belligerents, was being paid not in goods which she needed but in gold; also that the government feared, as a consequence of addition of much more gold to bank reserves or to general circulation, a further rise in prices, which had already gone up 25 per cent since war began. But, since foreign obligations to Sweden, whose merchandise exports largely exceeded imports, could no longer be discharged in gold, exchange on Sweden rose.—New York Times.

Soviet Troops Forced to Fight Finn Soldier Writes His Mother

Russian soldiers are locked in their tanks by their officers . . Bolshevik OGPU troops — Stalin's political police — shoot down those Russian soldiers who fail to advance on orders . . Russian 'planes are pretty silver birds against the blue sky; their beauty is enhanced by black puffs of anti-aircraft shells exploding about them . . .

Straight from the Mannerheim line where Finnish troops are battling Soviet invaders come some of these graphic statements in a letter addressed by her son to Mrs. N. T. Wadenstjerna, 3630 Dorchester street, and reported in Montreal Star.

Son a Soldier

Her son is fighting the Bolsheviks. His father and his grandfather fought them too — but that was in 1919, and both gave their lives for the independence of Finland. And so Sergei, who was a little boy then, but now is married with a wife and child living in the ruins of Helsinki thinks it but natural that he should be fighting the Bolsheviks again.

His letter, which follows, has no complaints in it, but for the one that aid is coming slowly, perhaps too slowly, to the fighting Finns. War has its beauty to him. It is beautiful when raiding bombers are brought down. It is horrible when children are killed; when Russian soldiers are driven forward to attack by the OGPU; when Russian soldiers form walls of dead—meters high.

Sergei is proud of his English. He visited Montreal six years ago to see his mother. He writes as follows:

Bombing Frequent

"Dear Mother,

"Excuse me that I've not written for a long time. Aino (his wife) got your telegram at Christmas but I haven't got any letters since October. We are all in good health. Aino and Rita (daughter) are still in Helsinki. I think that it is no use to evacuate to the country because the Bolsheviks are bombing and firing with machine guns more country places than town spots. Therefore it is not so dangerous to remain in town. Besides, in all towns there are anti-aircraft guns, but not so in the country.

"Isn't it funny that a country of 184,000,000 cannot win over a nation of 3,800,000! But war wouldn't be so terrible if it were not for the aircraft. It is true that we have guns but women and children can only run to the cellars and wait if airbombs are dropping on the buildings where they are — or are not.

"We are waiting for other countries to help us materially. Therefore we haven't much use for moral help. It is only words. We have food, anyhow, until summer, maybe longer.

"I have twice been home. Rita is growing and is all the time interested in air raid alarms. She thinks its fun to run to a bomb-safe cellar. On the first day of the war we were only 50 meters from the wreck of a Russian 'plane which dropped near our building. It was a lovely crash! So Aino and Rita have seen the war very close.

Spirits High

"The spirit in all the land is very good, so if we get a little help we will win the war. This war isn't only our private war. We are fighting for all civilization. But help is coming a little too slow.

"I hope that you are working. Can you arrange to get on one of the British ambulances which are coming to Finland. You are a war nurse and speak both Finnish and Swedish. I'm sure you could get on and then we'd meet again.

"I am so often on lonely night patrols, thinking about our old life. The Bolsheviks have destroyed it—but now we can pay back for our fathers', grandfathers', uncles' and others' killings.

"I can't understand why the Russian people aren't in revolt. They are so dirty, hungry and badly dressed. Their officers and politicians are driving them to their deaths with machine-guns. The tanks are locked from outside so that the men have to go through our lines—or die. They don't take care of their own wounded and make barricades and bridges of the bodies of their own dead soldiers.

Hordes of Russians

"Their troops are badly trained but they come all the time in new and greater crowds so that our soldiers cannot kill as many as are coming. In some places there are walls of dead, three meters high,—but still they come. It isn't war. It's mass killing. Yet if we don't kill them their own Ogpu troops would finish them.

"Most of our prisoners have their legs or hands frozen. The air attacks aren't really so terrible. We are getting used to them. It is very nice to see in bright sunshine, silver birds flying high in the sky with black anti-aircraft shells smoke exploding around them. The 'planes leave a white ribbon of exhaust smoke trailing. It stays for a long time in the cold air. Just now one of our guns got one of them. The smoke is getting black and the 'plane is quickly coming down. All the people outside the bombshelter are yelling "Elakoou Suomi" (Long Live Finland).

"I am sure that God will repay the red devils for all the child murders they have done. And I am sure that the Finns will never be slaves of the Bolsheviks. Here we have now one nation and one single spirit. There are no parties of the left or parties of the right. All the nation is fighting for freedom."

These Germans Know

With the British and French navies intercepting vessels and checking them for contraband and currency bound for Germany, many Nazi sympathizers have been trying to evade the search by posting letters air mail. But there again they have been checkmated, as the United Stated clipper planes stopped at Bermuda, a British possession, and funds being sent were picked up there. It is now announced that this stop will be eliminated on eastbound flights.

In many cases, German-born Americans have been sending money home for years, to help out their kin. They know that the need of these people is now greater than in peace-time. They have no assurance, of course, that the Nazi authorities would not grab the funds.

Herr Hitler can disparage Britain's naval and other power. But these Germans who are having their mails intercepted by the British will be hard to convince. They have first-hand knowledge of the far-flung might of Britain. They will find Nazi propaganda less satisfying than coin in their pockets.—Windsor Star.

Daily War Survey

By The Canadian Press

Care taken by fighting nations to assure their food supplies over a long period of war is only one of many illustrations of how lessons learned in the First Great War are heeded in the present.

France and Great Britain already have adopted measures of economic control which were not even considered until the last war had been raging for two years. Germany adopted measures even before the start of this war.

The ruling powers remember well that Germany and Austria endured near starvation towards the close of the last war and that Great Britain, during the dread months of heavy submarine activity in 1917, was close to a complete failure of its rationing system.

While the exact quantities of the food reserves of the belligerents are a secret some of the means taken to guard against hunger are known. The Germans have taken care to foster their agriculture and taken steps to prevent the slaughter of milk cows and breeding pigs.

Germany's whole policy in regard to the Balkan nations is indicated by the supply problem and finally the ideal with Soviet Russia is designed to bring the vast agricultural resources of eastern Europe into the German supply system after a year or a year and a half.

So long as the Allies retain the mastery of the sea their food resources probably will remain larger and more secure than those of Germany which as time goes on will depend more and more on the political uncertainties of Russia, limited means of transport and limited means of payment.

But mastery of the sea is no less important for France than for Great Britain. While France depends less on imported food than Great Britain its agricultural industry is not in as robust condition as in 1914. Large areas of French farm lands were devastated in the last war and, although rehabilitation was remarkable, the ill effects have not been removed entirely.

2 REMANDED ON MURDER CHARGE

Winnipeg, Feb. 29—(CP)— John Andrusiak and John Ashton Barnett, Winnipeg ex-convicts, were charged in police court Wednesday with the murder of Constable John McDonald in a downtown building Feb. 10. They were remanded to March 5 for preliminary hearing.

A coroner's jury Tuesday returned a verdict that McDonald had died from effects of a bullet fired from a gun in the hands of Mike Atamonchuk, Winnipeg, and that Andrusiak and Barnett were associated with him in the crime.

Atamonchuk took his own life when cornered by police Feb. 13 and the other two were arrested on city streets shortly after the murder.

Production on Farm Must Rise to Meet Needs

London, Feb. 29 (CP)— Great Britain must rise to new heights in farm production to meet the needs of war, Prime Minister Chamberlain told the Chairman of the County War Agricultural Executive Committees Wednesday in an address at the Health Ministry.

"Although agriculture is still our greatest industry," he said, "I think we must correctly say that this country is in the main an industrialised country, and anyhow it is quite certain that in the course of the years we have built up our system of economy upon the immense volume of imports of food for the people and imports also of feeding stuffs or our livestock.

"We are a long way from the time when herds of pigs used to run in the oak woods of Britain and support themselves on acorns. If we are to produce the scientific food products of today we have to adopt scientific methods of feeding, and so we have in the past imported great quantities of grain and offals for feeding stuffs as well as immense quantities of corn and meat and other products for human consumption."

Wartime Situation

"In peacetime that was a system which, I think, has on the whole worked extremely well, but the moment we get into war a new situation necessarily arises, and we are faced at once with the necessity for imports of a different character and, again, of great volume.

Bridge Street Church Sunday School was the scene of delightful afternoon tea held yesterday under the auspices of the Red Cross unit of the Church, with wonderful success. The spacious room was filled with visitors throughout the tea hours and the splendid sum of $114. was realized for the Red Cross work that is being undertaken by this energetic group. The guests were welcomed by Mrs. W. Northcott, president of the Unit, and Mrs. James Sinclair. Mrs. J. G. Galloway, Miss Elizabeth Corbett and Mrs. E. B. Mosher were conveners of the interesting affair. The tea table at which Miss Clara Yeomans, Mrs. W. C. Morgan, Mrs. J. R. Smith and Mrs. J. Buchanan presided was beautifully arranged with vivid red tulips, with a single white calla lily as a token of remembrance of the boys overseas. White tapers in brass holders completed the centrepiece, while similar tapers in many parts of the room gave a charming radiance to the scene. On the platform, in the centre of which was a large Union Jack, there was a display of work completed by the group and the many perfectly finished articles were greatly admired. Attractive quilts, gaily patterned, had been made of the pieces of flannelette left over from pajamas. These quilts were for sale, the money to be used to buy material for further work. Assisting during the afternoon were—Mrs. J. R. Eind, Mrs. Arthur Sprague, Mrs. R. H. Empson, Mrs. Allan Lazier, Miss Betty Cooper, Miss Josephine Tickell, Mrs. Rufus Wensley, Mrs. R. M. Anderson, Mrs. R. D. Arnott, Mrs. Sylvia Lazier, Mrs. F. E. Turney, Mrs. R. M. Bird, Mrs. Harry Lee, Mrs. W. J. Price, Mrs. A. Curry and Mrs. E. Bassingthwaighte. Miss Aileen McKeown was treasurer for the tea. Adding to the pleasure of the guests was the program of piano music played in splendid style by Mr. William Connor. The home cooking table was an excellent feature of the affair and was in charge of Mrs. F. Moon, convener, Miss Ivy Dickens, co-convener, Mrs. F. Correll, Mrs. I. G. Hefkey, Mrs. S. Fox, Mrs. A. Lazier, Mrs. J. Mitchell, Mrs. Ross Bateman, Mrs. W. N. Gilroy, Miss Helen Sulman, and Mrs. Hall. Mrs. J. Cook and Mrs. F. Foley acted as treasurers for the home cooking.

Two Leap Year Babies Born At Hospital

"The dear little dimpled darlings, have never seen Christmas yet"—nor will they see another birthday until 1944.

Two small bundles of gurgling femininity who arrived via the Stork Patrol at the Belleville General Hospital missed three birthday presents by twenty and thirty minutes respectively today.

For this is February 29th which falls but once every four years, and which makes an eighty-four year old youngster eligible to record his first vote—if he follows the calendar.

At twelve-twenty a.m., today a baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Johnson, Madoc, while ten minutes later Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Russell, R.R. 6, Belleville, became the proud parents of a daughter.

But Time like the tide and the proverbial death and taxes wait for no man, or woman as far as that goes, and although the babies will age with the passing years, they officially will not observe birthdays but once every four years. Which being ladies, they won't mind in the least as they will have a legitimate excuse later on to subtract anywhere from four to eight years from their ages, and do it without blushing.

Among Belleville General hospital babies who celebrate today is one who actually marks his third birthday today, but in reality is twelve years old, Master "Billy" Price Morris, son of Provincial Constable and Mrs. Price Morris, Bowmanville and formerly of this city; and Miss Marie Embury, William St., who is sixteen today.

Advice to the Lovelorn

The Old Marriage Adage—Bear and Forbear

When a girl writes me that she and her fiance are devotedly in love, and there is no obstacle to their marriage except that she is holding off because her older sister has married badly, and at 26 or 27 looks like an old woman worn out with domestic cares and child-bearing, I feel like asking her if she declines to have an automobile because she has read about a motor accident in today's paper.

Unbelievable as it is, that's the story of a good many letters which come to this column, especially when the engaged girl has to do her part in buying shoes and groceries for the poorly married sister's family. These young spinsters who command good pay envelopes have seen so many eight-cylinder romances skid and go into the ditch, that they are over-cautious.

Perhaps these girls may have acted as bridesmaids at a wedding where the principals couldn't live without each other another week, and then they may have seen things come to such a pass that the turtle doves could not stand each other for a day longer.

It's all very sad and very revealing, but not all marriages have such tragic finales. In spite of Reno, Mexico and our local divorce courts, there are husbands and wives who stay lovers 'til the end of the chapter.

You can hardly open a paper without finding the weather-beaten faces of some old couple who have just celebrated their golden wedding. And these old warriors of life have remained happy in each other's live, in spite of poverty, sickness, death and all the other misfortunes to which flesh is heir.

Why don't these girls who write that they're afraid to marry because they see so much unhappiness on every side, concentrate on these old people, who, in each other's love, have had the strength given them to stand seventy, eighty and even more years of living.

Every marriage is an individual proposition, and whether it stands or falls depends entirely on the amount of patience and good will that the couple take with them from the altar.

There used to be an old-fashioned adage, much quoted in the pre-Reno days. It ran something like this. In married life there are two bears—bear and forbear. Take good care of these mythical animals, feed and minister to them, and they will guard the threshold of your home.

"My wife does not take half the care of me that she does of the canary hanging in our dining-room window", wails a husband, "so I'm beginning to hate the canary and would enjoy wringing its neck."

Attention wives! Consider well this lesson of the canary and see that your husband is equally well fed and watered, and that he has a little of the goo-goo talk you shower upon the bird. After all, men are just grownup boys, and the sugar and spice you spread for them in your courting days (yes, I mean just that) will keep them happy and smiling until it comes time to have your picture taken for the golden wedding anniversary with your children and grandchildren in the background.

The prime recipe for a happy marriage is patience, good sportsmanship, intelligence, a little flattery now and then, and above all, a sense of humor. Please don't be afraid to try this old and unfailing remedy, all you girls who hesitate because you have a good fat pay envelope. Your pay envelope will not keep your heart warm after the days of your youth have vanished.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Ten Rules for Smoking-Manners

1—Respect the point of view or the prejucices of people about smoking in your home, in other people's homes, in public places, and in your community.

2—Don't smoke in any place where "No Smoking" is requested. There is a reason for this request that should be respected.

3—Don't smoke when you sense that it will be or may be offensive to others. You can always find out the other person's reactions about smoking by considerately asking. "Do you mind if I smoke?"

4—Carry your own cigarettes. Don't make a practice of always being a "gimme" girl or man.

5—When you remove a flake of tobacco from your mouth, remove it as unobstrusively as possible, between your thumb and finger, and put it on the side of the ash tray. Don't spit it out!

6—Ashes belong in an ash tray. They don't belong on a plate or saucer, in a cup or on the floor.

7—Be kind to furniture and furnishings. Be careful where you lay a lighted cigarette or cigar.

8—When you have finished smoking, be sure to put out your cigarette or cigar, completely.

9—A girl or woman of good taste does not smoke on the street.

10—When someone offers you a cigarette ,if you don't smoke, say a gracious "No, thank you". No need to be self-conscious or self-righteous.

Thanks for Flowers

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

Today is my third day home from the hospital after having had a major operation. I received many beautiful flowers. Should I write a personal note of thanks to each one thanking for the flowers? If so, what sort of letter should I write? Please give me a sample?

Clara

Yes, to each one of these kind friends you would write a note of thanks, worded something like this:

Dear Dorothy,

What an ever-thoughtful and kind friends you are! The flowers were gloriously beautiful—and what a message of friendliness and cheer they brought with them as they came to me in the hospital. They made the room (and my heart too) grow with their radiant colors and their gay spirit. Thank you, with all my heart, for them and for your goodness to me.

I'm at home now, and I do hope that as soon as you can you will come to see me. I want so much to chat with you.

Dearest love, and again my deepest appreciation.

Devotedly,
Clara.

Formal Name

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,—

When at a public bridge and your name is called upon for the press, is it correct to give it as Mrs. Paul Tidewater or Mrs. Gertrude Tidewater?

Reader.

You would give your formal name, Mrs. Paul Tidewater.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Metal Poisoning

There has been a regular outbreak of lead poisonings in this section of the country recently. I have seen or heard of at least eight or ten cases amongst children. I have found, too, that the average parent knows very little about lead poisoning, or how children come by it.

The modern mother should be quite aware of the disease and its cause, and alert enough to see that her child does not get hold of any metal or painted object from which it can get enough lead to cause the poisoning.

I had a recent reminder of the vigilance parents need to keep in this particular. A little girl was given a set of toy dishes for Christmas. The child's uncle bought them for her at a store where the salesgirl told him they were aluminum.

Of course, the child just "had" to use her new dishes, and one day her mother served her a meal in the toy plate and cup.

About four hours later the child became pale, began vomiting violently, and was made soaking wet by perspiration. When this attack passed off, she complained of being very thirsty and drank a lot of water—fortunately, as it later turned out. About three-quarters of an hour later, she had a similar attack. This kept up for eight hours, the child having these attacks every 45 minutes or so.

With such striking symptoms, the doctor who was called had no difficulty recognizing lead poisoning. Right away he questioned the family as to the probable source of lead, and right away the toy dishes were suspected. Tests showed they were not pure aluminum, as represented, but contained quite a large portion of lead in their composition.

Now, in reality, this little girl was lucky. One of the first things she had out of her toy dishes, was orange juice. Now orange juice contains acids capable of eating large amounts of the lead out of the dishes. They brought out enough to cause the child to have an acute attack of lead poisoning. By next day she had recovered.

She could have been far less fortunate if she had eaten other foods, such as porridge, out of her toy dishes. Milk, or water, or cereal wouldn't have given her as much of the lead as orange juice, and as a result her symptoms would likely have been quite faint; she mightn't have felt sick enough to complain about them. So she would have gone on and on, eating out of her dishes, getting a little more lead each time until there was a lot in her system.

This is called chronic lead poisoning and it is much harder to diagnose and treat than the acute kind. The first symptoms are headache, insomnia, sometimes general pains, constipation, restlessness. These symptoms don't appear all at once, or they may be so mild at first as to escape detection. Possibly, the child just tells her mother that she doesn't feel well, and questioning won't bring out much more. Later more acute symptims, appear such as colic, anaemia, and sometimes paralysis. She becomes emaciated, and her skin is grey. Next stage is convulsions, delirium or coma.

This about the time the doctor is called in. But by then it is already a serious case.

PRIME MINISTER 'CHANGING TUNE'

During the war session of Parliament, however, the Prime Minister, according to Hansard said Sept. 8: "I am not attributing this by way of blame upon another administration. I am saying now that had we been in office in the previous years we doubtless would have done our utmost to cut down armaments and military expenditures," Dr. Manion told his audience.

"To which Mr. King should we listen?" he asked.

"Neither the Prime Minister nor Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Pensions Minister and former Minister of Defence, had dealt directly in their latest speeches with his charges that the Mackenzie King government refused to allow the British to set up their own training schools here two years ago, Dr. Manion said.

Wants Right Figures

Now to cover up that refusal to Britain, the "so-called" Commonwealth Air Training Scheme was devised, costing Canada at least $350,000,000 and Mr. Mackenzie King had admitted "practically none of which need have been spent had he consented to the British establishing these schools at their own expense."

The Conservative leader said that in reply to his questions as to what the government had done with the $188,000,000 spent on defence from 1935 to the outbreak of the war, Mr. Mackenzie King said the amount was $94,000,000, although at the same time Defence Minister Rogers said $112,000,000 had been spent.

(In Winnipeg Tuesday night Mr. Mackenzie King said that Canada's defence expenditure from 1936 to 1939, inclusive, was $94,000,000. In reporting a statement on the subject by Dr. Manion at Blind River, Ont., yesterday, the Canadian Press erroneously stated the dates used by the Prime Minister at Winnipeg were 1935 to 1939, inclusive.)

(In Eganville, Ont., Tuesday night Mr. Rogers said that defence expenditure between Nov. 1, 1935 and Aug. 31, 1939, was $112,764,449.)

Dr. Manion said he preferred to believe Mr. Mackenzie King to Mr. Rogers, if the Prime Minister would only be definite, which he rarely was. But "unfortunately for him I have his own definite statement about his government's expenditure on defence for the very period to which I refer." The $188,000,000 figure was taken from the Prime Minister's own mouth.

Refers to Hansard

Again referring to Hansard of Sept. 8, Dr. Manion quoted Mr. Mackenzie King as saying: "The actual expenditure for defence in each of the following years was, in round figures: 1935-36, $17,000,000; 1936-37, $22,923,000; 1937-38, $32,760,000; 1938-39, $34,432,000.

"The estimate for 1939-40 amounted altogether to $64,528,815," said the Conservative leader. Of that capital expenditures represented $30,000,000 and ordinary expenditures $34,000,000. Since then Governor General's warrants have been issued, in addition to that sum, amounting to $16,454,000.

"Rather strangely," said Dr. Manion, " in his Winnipeg speech Mr. King divided his figures of Sept. 8 by two. Apparently he thought half the truth should be good enough for Winnipeg and the Prairies and I suppose that, in the heat of the election, half-truths are the best we can get from Mr. King when politics are at stake.

"But which Mr. King are we to believe—the Mr. King at Winnipeg or the Mr. King of Sept. 8, 1939? I accept the latter because his figures there are based on the actual estimates passed in the House of Commons, not, as in Winnipeg, where he may make any irresponsibile statement, with no one present ready to check the totals.

"He has therefore displayed in this speech one of the reasons why he has scuttled parliament — so that he could make this type of irresponsible charge against me and give to the people, at the same time, so-called information that is only half true."

British Refused to Accept

Dr. Manion claimed that in the Commons July 1, 1938, Mr. King "repeatedly admits that confidential and informal training exploratory conversations with respect to the training of British air pilots have taken place and not once but repeatedly Mr. King makes it clear in the following pages of Hansard that his government would not permit the setting up of those schools to train British pilots at British expense.

It was true, Dr. Manion said, that the Prime Minister announced then his government was prepared to allow Pritish pilots to train in Canadian establishments but Canada had no such establishments, no training personnel and none of the proper type of airplane, and the British refused to accept.

"What Mr. King refers to in his Winnipeg speech in regard to Sir Kingsley Wood, Secretary for Air, having expressed warm appreciation for this offer, occurred as a result of this very debate, when Mr. King and his government were put on the spot by the Conservative opposition in the Canadian House of Commons."

The "farce" of the whole matter was the statement by Mr. Mackenzie almost a year later that the plan had provided for training 50 British pilots a year in Canada.

"To show what a complete piece of farce and humbug this so-called co-operation is, it is only necessary to quote from the same Sir Kingsley Wood, from a Canadian Press despatch of Oct. 10, 1939, when he said that Britain would need 25,000 pilots annually. In other words, it would take Canada 500 years to supply Britain with pilots for one year."

Scheme Cost $350,000,000

Now, to cover up that refusal to Britain, the so-called commonwealth air training scheme was devised, costing Canada at least $350,000,000 as Mr. King had admitted, Dr. Manion said, "practically none of which need have been spent had he consented to the British establishing those schools here at their own expense." In addition, Canada would have developed the greatest airplane manufacturing industry in the world.

Turning to labor issues, Dr. Manion termed Defence Minister Rogers, formerly Labor Minister, about the biggest failure as a Minister of Labor Canada ever had. He said in the last few days Mr. Rogers had been pouring insolent abuse on him.

Among other things Dr. Manion promised to introduce Unemployment Insurance legislation. Although constitutional obstacles were frequently cited, he claimed Unemployment Insurance could be put into effect in these provinces willing to co-operate.

A questioner asked his policy regarding Health Insurance. Dr. Manion replied he believed a committee of the House of Commons should study the question. He did not feel he should commit himself further at the moment.

TONY

—BY ELIZABETH VERNON—

CHAPTER XIV

"And now, if you want anything, Mr. Fleming," the nurse twittered, always slightly uneasy under that level glance, "you'll ring."

"I shall."

"Your visitor will be here quite soon. The first visitor—such an excitement—"

"That is all, thank you, Nurse."

Rather quickly, Nurse left the room. Not an easy patient, Mr. Fleming. Not what you'd call a genial young man. Still, there it was—he'd have to get used to his condition. And the sooner he made up his mind to it and became pleasant and began to crack jokes, thought Nurse Elmer, the better for him.

Alan lay back against the piled pillows. A week only had passed out of—how long? Perhaps fifty years. Would he ever bow before the crushing blow? Or would this fierce rebellion storm through his heart day after day, year after year, until at long last he dragged himself to his grave? Today was to have been his wedding day. Hyacinth loved him. He remembered her words: "Let's get married sooner. Much sooner." He thought,, "My darling—"

His eyes closed. His thoughts drifted in a merciful vagueness. All night till the dawn he had lain awake. And now he slept.

x x x

He drew a long breath. His head stirred on the pillows. Slowly he became aware of a presence near him. The scent of violets lingered on the air. His eyes opened. There beside him, the soft fur framing her face, her hands full of violets, stood Hyacinth. Her glance was on his, and it was that glance which had wakened him.

He put out a hand, still so brown and strong, and touched her. And then, as his mind cleared of dreams, he bit back the words that rose to his lips.

"Hullo, my dear," he said. And then he looked away, lest all his love and longing should show in his eyes. But she knew what he was feeling. She must know. And would she say, "Alan—I love you so," as she had said before? And "Let us be married soon"? Of course that marriage could never, never be. A lovely girl tied to a hopeless cripple. One would not let it be. But to hear her beg for that fate—somehow that would comfort one a little. It would be the most precious of memories.

"Alan, dear, you don't look ill. Not as I expected."

"No. Half of me is a man, still." Ah, why had those bitter words pressed past his lips? Was it because he had been so sure that she would fling herself into the arms that were still so strong—that still could hold her? It was best that she should not. It was much, much best. And yet a coldness that was like the gentlest, iciest breath, filled his heart.

She moved across the room to where a vase stood on an old chest. She lifted it down and filled it with water from his pitcher and all the time he watched her white hands, so steady. She set the vase near his bed. He did not thank her. He watched her face. How calm it was! And he was in an agony, longing for that word of love which he might take with him into the dark, frozen days.

She glanced round. "Mother sent messages. She's going to come and see you."

"Kind of her."

"But, Alan, you haven't any books; nothing to amuse you."

"No. Books will come later. At present I'm getting used to my condition—to being a hopeless invalid. I lie and think. Hyacinth," his hand moved against his will and touched hers; for the last time, he knew; for the last time. "We—I—you are released, you know. But you don't need the formal words to tell you that. We cannot marry—"

Hyacinth made a little sudden movement. She checked it. "No, Alan," she said. "It wouldn't do. It would be, well—rather morbidly romantic—"

"It wouldn't do." Strange, cheap words to mark the ending of an idyll like theirs. Like a knell they sounded in his head. A pauper funeral. For one moment his thoughts raced, out of his control, a stream of anguish.

"I'm so sorry, Alan."

He turned to her a face of stone on which was a little smile. "I am sure you are, Hyacinth."

And he had so hoped for the one kiss. He had been so sure of it—to take it in his heart down the years. But now—now, if she had stooped to kiss him he would have held her from him.

She did not stoop. But under that smiling gaze she lost a little of her calm. "I think I had better go."

"I think so, my dear."

"I will come and see you."

"No, Hyacinth. This is 'goodbye.' One must learn learn when to make one's exit."

"But, Alan—"

"Hyacinth, when I was a man, you may remember that I meant what I said. Oddly, I haven't changed in that respect."

She rose. She touched his hand. Turning, she went towards the door. Alan gazed at her. With a smile and a feeling as if his heart twisted within him, he thought, "What? Not a tear, not a backward glance for the poor, poor cripple?"

The door opened. It closed behind her.

For a long minute Alan lay quite still. His eyes were fixed on the door. He turned his head and gazed down as if he could see more than the small fragrant purple flowers on whose petals the drops still sparkled. He put out his hand. With all his strength his grip closed on the vase.

It shattered in his hand.

In the drawing-room of Oaken sat the three women of that house; Mrs. Querne, in her old-rose tea gown, reading a French novel by the light of the softly shaded lamps; Hyacinth, her back to the room, writing at the marqueterie table while the scratching of her pen broke the silence; Tony, gazing at the book on her knee with a frown of concentration that had nothing to do with the printed page.

A month had passed since Alan's accident. It was never spoken of, nor was the breaking off of Hyacinth's engagement. One couldn't help thinking of him. How desperately hurt he must be—all hope gone, and all happiness. Everything that made life worth living. She wouldn't forget how he had come with her to Jacky's room on that dreadful night. Nor how, that bitter day a month ago, he had taken her to see Jacky at the hospital. She was glad now that in those last hours they had been almost friends.

She looked up at her mother, yawning delicately in the great chair opposite. Her mother would not tell her when Jacky was coming home. "I don't know, Tony," she said, and nothing more. Useless to ask for anything more. Patience was what one must have at Oaken—and something, however distant, to look forward to. Now one looked forward to Jacky's return. And after that? To the day when one would escape. Tony glanced round the comfortable room, at the old and lovely furniture, the shaded lights. She smelt the scent of good cigarettes, of dried rose leaves, of perfume, and she thought: "When I'm twenty-one, you won't see me for dust." Yes, when she was of age, she would run away. And Jacky would come too. Surely "they" would be glad enough to get rid of that unwanted little presence? But what would one live on just at first? Just before one could get a job?

"Mother," how unexpected sounded one's voice in the empty room. "I want to know. Where is the jewelry that Father left me?"

There was a pause. Mrs. Querne looked up from the paper-backed novel. Hyacinth did not turn, but her pen had ceased to move on the paper.

"Who told you that he left you jewelry?" Mrs. Queren asked.

"He told me. He showed it to me."

"I remember very little about it" Mrs. Querne said slowly.

Tony left her chair. She tucked her book under her arm and strolled towards the door.

"Oh, well—I can ask the lawyers," she said. An instant later she had left the room.

Rose and Blue

By CAROL WHITNEY

Doris Whitford gave a last look at the clipping in her hand,nodded in a satisfied way, and pushed one of the many bells in the apartment house vestibule. When the door clicked, she pushed it open, and waited.

In a few moments the elevator door opened and a young man opened the door.

"Did you come to see me?" he asked.

"Oh!" Doris smiled. "Mr. Storey?"

"Yes—Charles Storey."

"Yes, I came to see you—about the rooms. Only I supposed it was Mrs. Storey. It usually is."

"Is it? That's strange. Though I suppose it's only natural. Will you come up?"

Doris entered the elevator and Charles Storey closed the door and pushed the indicator for the third floor.

The elevator quietly ascended.

He took Doris to his apartment, unlocked the door, and ushered her into his living room.

"It's nice, isn't it?" she said, looking about in a businesslike fashion.

"Yes, this room is all right. But of course it isn't—"

"Oh, no, of course not. Where is the room you have for me to look at."

Charles led her across a small hall, past a bathroom and clothes closet, to a bedroom.

"Oh!" Doris stopped in the doorway.

"What a nice room! Windows on both sides—and such lovely sunny windows. But—"

She hesitated a moment, a little confused.

"Yes." Charles Storey laughed. "That's just it. But—And I don't know what's wrong. I suppose you do. You can refurnish it just as you want."

"Just as you want?"

"Yes—just as you want. I suppose you can get all the stuff at Starling's, can't you? Well, just charge it to me, and it will be all right."

"But—really?" Doris beamed, as bright and gay as the spring sunshine that came in the wide window.

"Yes—really."

"It's the first time in my life I've ever had a room just as I wanted it. And you've no idea what fun it sounds."

"I suppose most people have ideas of their own?"

"Oh," answered Doris, "most decidedly, the people I've known. And such funny ideas, too."

"Well—what about it? Will it be all right?"

"All right? Of course."

Doris sat down, with a pencil and little notebook. "Can I have new curtains?"

"Certainly. Anything you want. Only make it look human. This apartment belonged to my uncle. He's gone abroad—left it as it is. The living room's pretty decent. But the rest is awful."

Doris longed to ask him what "the rest" of the apartment was. She knew the words of the advertisement had brought her here.

"Pleasant room, with big windows, plenty of sun, to rent to young lady. Share kitchen privileges with another lady. Room will be decorated if desired.

She wished "the other lady" would come in. Perhaps it was his sister. Or his mother.

In the meantime she was making notes and sketches and figures, measuring the room with her eye, visualizing it as it would look with new draperies, some new furniture, and much rearrangement.

"Would you think corn-colored net over the windows and ruffled, blue side curtains, that hang to the floor and are looped back halfway up—with big bows, I think they're using them, now, would you think that was nice?"

"Well—I like blue. You wouldn't be putting any pink in the room?"

"A rose-colored slip on that big brown upholstered chair, I think. And perhaps a rose-colored pottery lamp with a natural parchment shade with blue stars on it. I could make that."

"But isn't blue and pink somewhat—well, rather—it isn't a very strong combination, is it — for a man?"

"No—I suppose not. But I've always loved it, always longed for a room with deep blue curtains and a little deep rose for contrast. I think it will be sweet. Now—" Doris blushed, with a sudden confusion—"what about price? I guess that comes next."

"That's up to you," said Charles Storey. "We needn't bother about that now. Will you get it fixed up next week?"

"Oh yes," said Doris. "Early in the week."

Half an hour later, Charles Storey sat comfortably in his bachelor's living room, trying to surround himself with the peace and contentment that usually came to him when he passed within the doors of his apartment. But he was unsuccessful in his efforts.

Peace and contentment had gone. He couldn't quite decided why.

Perhaps it was thought of living in a rose-colored and soft blue bedroom. Perhaps it was the memory of a wistfully eager girl, pretty and young, sitting on the arm of his big chair, making sketches and figures in a little notebook.

"But—rose and blue! I should have shown some spunk—told her I didn't want it. I thought they always tried to find out your taste, anyway. I guess she had me bewitched."

He had just reached that point in his cogitations—and would probably have reached no further—when his telephone bell rang. He picked up the receiver and a worried woman's voice hurried over the wire in explanation. "Oh, Mr. Storey! This is Miss Brown, of the interior decorating department of Starling's. I had an appointment to meet you this afternoon at your apartment and make plans to do your bedroom over. I just can't explain or apologize—I forgot the appointment. I had it in my notebook, of course,

"You didn't come?" questioned Charles. "Then who did?"

"Nobody. I'm home, now, checking on the day's work, and I found your appointment in my notebook. I'm awfully sorry."

"Oh, that's all right, Miss — Brown. Quite all right. I seem to have had another engagement, too. And—I'll want you to do the room over, you know. How about coming back in—well, a month I think I'll want it in blue and rose, and I'll know by then."

The change in Charles Storey's point of view toward rose and blue had been startling, even to himself.

When he took off the receiver he hated rose and blue.

When he learned that his visitor of the afternoon had not been the interior decorator he had ordered from Starling's, he had been puzzled, and blue and rose furnishings went from his mind.

As he listened to apologies, his eye wandered to the paper, opened to the want ads.

There he read, among "Rooms to Rent," the words that had brought Doris Whitford to his door, "Pleasant room, with big windows, plenty of sun, to rent to young lady. Share kitchen privileges with another lady. Room will be decorated if desired. Storer." And the address of the apartment he lived in.

They often got mixed up—Storer and Storey. And suddenly his liking for blue and rose draperies soared high. If, perhaps, he could get hold of Doris and explain—if, perhaps, she could get a room with Miss Storer for a little while—if, perhaps, he could persuade her to change back to his apartment after she had known him for a decent interval; well, then, why not a room done in rose and blue?

Dr. Caldwell Speaks To Frankford Red Cross Executive

Frankford — On Saturday, Feb. 17th the executive of the Red Cross met at the home of Mrs. G. Ketcheson. Dr. Caldwell, assistant director of the Ontario Divisional Office, spoke to the ladies.

He first gave a short historical review of the Red Cross, telling that it was in the mind of Florence Nightingale that there was born the idea which soon afterward found its realization in the Red Cross.

He said that the Red Cross is not just an Ontario or a Canadian organization but a great international organization. At all times, in peace as well as in war its responsibility is to send aid to any place and to any people in the world where there is suffering and hardship. Its purpose in time of peace is to carry on and assist in work for the improvement of health, the prevention of disease and the relief of suffering throughout the world.

In relation to war work, there are two things to be kept in mind. The Red Cross makes and sends vast supplies to disabled soldiers overseas and the Red Cross needs money. Money is required to provide the channel through which these supplies may be sent. Money is also required to build and maintain hospitals. At present a six-hundred bed hospital is being built at Taplow.

In answer to questions of the ladies he said that all supplies are distributed free to the soldiers. Not one red cent ever comes back to the Red Cross.

On Wednesday, Feb. 21st., the Red Cross Branch of Frankford met in the Community Hall with president, Mrs. Bush, presiding.

The treasurer reported that $126.42 was collected to date.

The ladies decided to make up those supplies which had been sent from Trenton when Frankford was considering working as a committee with Trenton as its branch. These goods were subsequently given out.

It was moved by Mrs. Dixon and seconded by Mrs. Madill that material be bought immediately. Carried.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem.

The members of the Triple Group met on Monday evening at the home of Mrs. Gerald Dixon. The meeting was opened by the convener, Mrs. Smith Osterhout. A hymn was sung. Mrs. Geo. FATHER WANTED "NO FUSS"

Washington, Feb. 29—(AP)—Mr. and Mrs. William Andrew White were acclaimed two years ago for having a family of 17 children, all living at home. Now they have 18. Their 10th son was born Tuesday night, but White, a treasury clerk, tried to keep it quiet to avoid any "fuss."

SINGER FOUND DEAD

New York, Feb. 29—(AP)—Nine Palina, 39, famed in the Baltic countries as a singer of songs the street urchins sing, was found dead yesterday, dangling in a noose of brilliant scarves—red and green, yellow and blue. Neighbors told police the Russian concert singer had been unable to obtain engagements, was fearful of the future and longed for her homeland.

ITALY CLINGING GRIMLY TO ROLE OF NEUTRAL NATION

Reaping Few of the Blessings of Peace and Suffering Some of Sacrifices of War

LIVING IS HIGH

Rome, Feb. 29 (AP).—Italy clings grimly to her role of non-belligerency, is reaping few of the blessings of peace and is suffering some of the sacrifices of war at the end of the first six months of conflict.

Italians concede it is a precarious role.

Two developments considered most likely to upset Italian non-belligerence are the prospect of absolute victory for one side or extension of the war into the Balkans.

A Russian attack on Hungary or Rumania, diplomatic circles agree, almost certainly would find Italy fulfilling her favorite role—that of being a bulwark against Bolshevism.

The Italian position in the event of a German or French-British move in the Balkans is less clear. Informed Fascists say Italy would not let her Balkan interests go by default and in either case might face the necessity of making a choice between the belligerents.

Many Foods Rationed.

Aside from its prospective benefits, non-belligerency already has brought Italy advantages and disadvantages. On the debit side must be listed the strain of gearing national life to wartime standards, an inescapable corollary of the dictum that Italy may be obigled at any moment to take up her arms and fight.

Coffee, sugar and gasoline are rationed severely, allowances being even less than those of some of the countries at war. Two days a week are meatless. Laundry soap has all but disappeared. Cooking gas ceases to flow after 9 p.m. A coal shortage, combined with the most severe winter in a generation, has caused general discomfort.

The severest test of popular endurance is the precipitous rise of the cost of living. It is estimated reliably that since the start of the war prices have increased an average of more than 20 per cent.

Coffee Costs $1.10 a Pound.

Coffee costs $1.10 a pound; bread, 8 cents; potatoes, 4 cents; butter, 5 cents; veal, 50 cents; beef, 35 to 50; pork, 35; sugar, 18; lamb, 30; eggs, 55 cents a dozen.

These are alarming prices in a country where $75 a month is a good salary for a white collar worker.

The end is not yet in sight. A two per cent turnover tax, effective three weeks ago, is hoisting living costs still further. Experts expect it to boost living costs another six to ten per cent.

Non-belligerency has its advantages, too.

It is popular with the people. Although they grumble at deflation of their purses, they find that infinitely preferable to shedding blood in some Alpine trench.

Militarily, the Italian policy has increased Italy's strength. Nearly a year ago, Mussolini told Adolf Hitler this country would not be prepared fully for war for three years. Military experts believe much progress has been made in rectifying deficiencies during the six months Italy has spent on the sidelines of the war.

Toronto, Feb. 29—Improved trading stiffened prices on the butter market. Buyers were forded to pay 26 1-4c per pound for the first-grade Ontario product in late dealings as offerings at the 26c mark were absorbed. No change occurred in prints to the retail trade.

A quieter lower trend was evident on the egg market. Prices on the three top grades eased from 1-2c to 1c per dozen in both sections. Government inspected lots of graded eggs moved at the previous day's prices, however.

13 SURVIVORS OF DUTCH SHIP BROUGHT TO PORT

Captain of Rescue Ship Almost Ignored Lifeboat in Which Men Were Huddled

ALMOST EXHAUSTED

London, Feb. 29.—(CP)—Captain William Christie of the British freighter Glengorchy last night brought to Britain 13 survivors of the torpedoed Netherlands vessel Den Haag, 8,971 tons, and told how he almost ignored their lifeboat because no one seemed to be in it.

The men in turn described how, exhausted, they had given up hope of being rescued and had stretched out to die on the bottom of the boat.

Their rescue hinged on a blast of the Glengorchy's whistle. This is the story Captain Christie told—

Homeward bound from the Far East, the Glengorchy passed through a large patch of oil floating on the water and half an hour later Captain Christie sighted an open boat about 80 miles off the Spanish coast.

A fresh breeze lashed the rough seas and there was no sign of life in the small boat. Captain Christie ordered the helmsman to circle around the boat and sound his whistle.

The boat suddenly came to life with heads and waving arms appearing over the gunwhales.

It contained the captain, chief engineer and nine seamen of the Netherland motor tanker Den Haag, which was torpedoed without warning by a German submarine while en route from New York to Rotterdam, February 15.

For four days the survivors drifted in their small open boat. Only one of them was able to climb aboard the Glengorchy without assistance.

Nothing is known of the fate of the 26 other members of the crew of the Den Haag, who took to two other boats.

WAR BRIEFS

London, Feb. 29—(CP)— Several British airmen who were interned in Belgium after forced landings escaped across the French frontier and returned to England some weeks ago, a reliable source said today.

Various reports set the number of escaped fliers at three to five. Officials declined to give the details.

Glasgow, Scotland, Feb. 29—(CP Cable)—James Nector of Vancouver, was among the 35 survivors of the torpedoed freighter 4,995-ton Loch Maddy, it was announced today by managers for the ship's owners, the Glasgow Navigation Company. Four lives were lost when the ship went down in the North Atlantic Feb. 22.

London, Feb. 29—(CP)—Unless London is bombed before midnight tonight Colonel Josiah Wedgwood, Labor Member of Parliament, will be 5 pounds ($22) to the good. When war broke out he endeavored to calm what he considered another M.P.'s ousness by bettin e city wou

London, Feb. 29 (CP)—Major Kermit Roosevelt needed only the formal nod of the War Office today to be off for the north in command of an international volunteer brigade in Finland.

The son of Theodore Roosevelt, former President of the United States, who won a medal with the British forces before the United States entered the last war, expected permission before the end of the day to resign his Major's commission in the British army, which he joined in the early weeks of this war.

A Finnish official said: "Major Roosevelt's record in the last war and his exploits as an explorer in Tibet, India and China are qualifications which suit him for this post."

Heavy Foreign Demand Raises Prices of Honey

Export Buyers Offering Twelve Cents Upwards—Practically All of 1939 Output Sold

10,000 TONS SHIPPED

Attracted by fancy prices which it is said are approximately 100 percent higher than those offered a year ago, bee-keepers of this Central Ontario district have practically sold their entire 1939 output of honey, C. T. Stevenson, senior fruit inspector for the Federal Department of Agriculture stated yesterday.

So anxious are buyers to obtain sufficient supplies for shipment that they are purchasing honey in one and two-pound containers, he added.

The last shipment to leave this district was consigned yesterday from Lindsay when a carload of honey which taxed buyers' capacities to the limit to obtain, left for an eastern seaport for shipment overseas.

Within the past three or four months, nearly ten thousand tons have left central and eastern Ontario for overseas, while other heavy shipments were consigned last Autumn.

An outstanding apiarist of Prince Edward County who annually garners from two to four thousand tons of honey has sold his entire crop six weeks ago, he said, adding that he had been approached several times since with attractive offers from buyers. Prices last year were approximately six and one-half cents, he said, while today export buyers are offering anywhere from twelve cents the pound upwards.

In some cases it has been reported that honey is being imported from the United States where it can be bought at a price which, plus duty, warrants a substantial profit to the buyer.

No Reason for Complacency Anthony Eden Tells Audience

Months of Comparative Lull Have Assisted Britain in Forging Her Weapons States Speaker

NO PARALLEL

Liverpool, Feb. 29—(CP) — Anthony Eden, Secretary for the Dominions, told an audience here today that there is no reason for complacency because the first six months of the war have brought little heavy fighting or air raids on civilian centres.

"These months have helped us forge our weapons," he declared. "They will have to be used. Time has been most valuable in preparations, but there is in that no cause for complacency. There is even danger if we forget the vital lesson that, in war, victory in the last phase means the defeat of the enemy."

Of the Empire Air Training system centring in Canada, Mr. Eden said:

"From this vast scheme as it develops there will flow a continuous stream of pilots, observers and gun crews to be numbered not in thousands but in tens of thousands every year.

"I have no hesitation in saying that its conception and, as I believe, in its execution, there is no parallel in the world's history for a scheme of this character.

"Plans are now in the making for personnel to be trained in Southern Rhodesia and also in the Union of South Africa side by side with young men of the South African air force. That scheme is over and above the big Canadian scheme."

Of general war aims the Domions secretary said:

"Until Hitlerism and the international gangsterism for which it stands are utterly and finally destroyed there is going to be neither security nor hope for the future.

"Any truce, any patchwork compromise which you try to come to now, if it ignored those stark dangers, would only confront us with greater dangers a few months or a few years hence, and then it might be too late.

When she failed to arrive, Westmore was quoted as saying he checked with New York and found that Miss Dickson had left, presumably for Hollywood, Thursday night.

The newspapers said Westmore added that he and Miss Dickson, who had been making a personal appearance tour, had had a "serious disagreement".

RAISES QUESTION OVER COMMUNISTS

British Conservative M.P. Asks if Britain to Take Step to Ban Communist Party

London, Feb. 29.—(CP)—A suggestion that the British Communist Party be banned was made in the House of Commons today by Captain Alan Graham, Conservative, who asked Home Secretary Sir John Anderson whether he would take steps to co-ordinate the activity of his department as regards Communists with that of the French government.

France has banned Communist organizations and expelled Communist members of parliament.

"These are matters", Sir John answered, "which by common understanding the governments of France and the United Kingdom reserve their discretion to take whatever measures they consider best for the preservation of internal security in the light of domestic circumstances.

"While the government has no desire to interfere with the free expression of opinion in this country, a careful watch is being kept on subversive movements carried on under the cloak of legitimate political activity."

Sonia was not weighed at birth because of her delicate condition. At the age of two weeks, after she obviously had gained weight, she weighed one pound, 12 ounces. She is 13 1-2 inches tall and her head is no larger than an apple. She never has been clothed and is kept alone in a bedroom at a temperature of 90 degrees.

BRITAIN TO TAKE CANADA'S ENTIRE ALUMINUM EXPORT

Production of Metal to be Greatly Expanded—Price About 20 Cents a Pound

FOR 1940 and 1941

Montreal, Feb. 29 (CP).—Aluminum, vital to the empire's war machine, will flow to Great Britain from Canada in ever-increasing quantities between now and the end of 1941.

Announcements made simultaneously last night here and in London disclosed that the British Ministry of Supply has purchased the entire exportable surplus of the Aluminum Company of Canada for the remainder of 1940 and for 1941.

It was also disclosed that the aluminum firm, Canada's main producer, has embarked on a wide program of expansion. The London announcement said that the increase in Canada's production will be paralled by a boost in the output of the British Aluminum Company, whose 1940 output has been purchased by Britain.

The Montreal announcement, made by President R. E. Powell of the Aluminum Company, said the base price will be equal approximately to that current in Canada at the outbreak of the war—about 20 cents a pound. The deal, involving "practically all" of the firm's crude aluminum production, will not encroach on Canada's domestic demands for the metal.

Just how extensive the Canadian expansion program will be was not disclosed. But the announcement did note that it will put Canada almost on a par with Germany as a producer of aluminum, essential in the manufacture of gas masks, aircraft and other war equipment.

Output 100,000 Tons In '39.

Some idea may be gained from the figures of Canada's 1939 output — approximately 100,000 short tons — and Germany's estimated annual output—between 130,000 and 140,000 tons.

Apparently much of the expansion will be made at the firm's plant at Arvida, Que., in the Saguenay district, where, the announcement said, an average of about 1,500 men will be needed for erection of new structures and equipment. In addition, the announcement said that "for operation of new equipment, authorized but not completed, the company and its subsidiaries will need about 1,700 additional employees, of whom approximately two-thirds will work in the Saguenay."

With the possible exception of certain skilled tradesmen, it was pointed out, those likely to be required for construction and for operation are already employed or available.

The company operates other plants at Shawinigan Falls, Que., and Toronto while a fourth is under construction at Kingston, Ont. The Kingston plant, to be devoted to the production of strong alloys for aircraft, is not involved in the present arrangement, an official said.

The agreement supplements a previous one which called for purchase by the British ministry of 90 per cent. of the company's annual exportable surplus.

Find Haven at Legation

It was reported the beleaguered Czecho-Slovaks sought haven in the diplomatic immunity of the legation when police started to round up scores of persons holding French passports without being able to speak French.

Germany was reported to have entered a stiff protest against Hungary's countenancing the passage of refugees through the country.

The basis of the German objection was said to be a belief that most of the refugees are former army officers or reservists seeking to join the Czecho-Slovak legion in Paris to fight Germany for a reconstitution of the shattered Czecho-Slovak republic.

Unlike refugee Poles, the fugitives from the German protectorate of Bohemia and Maravia have no diplomatic representative to whom to apply for passports. They have turned to Allied diplomats. The republic of Czecho-Slovakia no longer is recognised by Hungary but Poles have their own legation.

Treated Severely is Charge

Hundreds of Czecho-Slovak refugees, most of them in Hungarian jails, believe they face deportation as a result of German pressure applied to Hungarian officials diplomatically and through the Gestapo.

Germany was understood to have demanded that Hungary request France to recall Lieut.-Colonel Tony Albord, military attache of the legation, who was accused of furnishing passports through agents stationed in northern Hungarian villages shortly after the war started.

Forty eight Czecho-Slovaks held in the Budapest citadel have written to neutral legations that "the influence of the Gestapo has forced the Hungarians to treat us severely."

Plead for Intervention

The prisoners identified themselves as former army officers, college professors and students. They pleaded for intervention to avert deportation back to the German protectorate "where certain death awaits."

One letter, dated Feb. 13, described an attempt by five men to break prison which caused guards to fire on them. The break was tried on Feb 11 when the prisoners went into the citadel courtyard to get water from a pump.

"Nine bullets were fired at them" said the letter. "One of the students seemed to have been hit and wounded."

Two of the men were caught by police, the letter added, and were "beaten to bloody unconsciousness at the citadel."

ANTI-AIRCRAFT BATTERIES BUSY

Dutch Gunners Pepper Sky Evidently to Drive Off Aerial Invaders

Amsterdam, Feb. 29. — (AP)—Anti-aircraft batteries early today peppered the sky south of Amsterdam apparently to drive off aerial trespassers. It was the fourth time in as many days that Netherlands air defence guns had gone into action.

Residents of cities on the North Sea coast who earlier heard cannonading and believed there had been a naval engagement somewhere off the hook of Holland, outside territorial waters, learned today that it came from Netherlands navy and coast guard ships in exercises.

Brussels, Feb. 29.—(AP)—Anti-aircraft batteries at Ghent fired at a plane, described as German, early Wednesday, it was disclosed today.

The plane disappeared to the west, dropping anti-Polish pamphlets similar to those dropped by an unidentified plane over the province of Namur the night before.

Three British soldiers were reported arrested today after inadvertently crossing the frontier into Belgium, bringing to 15 the number of Britons interned in this country.

LOANS TO FINLAND, CHINA

Washington, Feb. 29 —(AP)—The United States Senate completed Congressional action today on a bill to increase capital of the export-import bank, making possible additional loans to Finland and China.

The measure, which would double the existing $100,000,000 capital of the export-import bank, now goes to the White House.

Finns' Defensive Actions.

The Kamara mentioned is a highway junction five miles north of a railroad station of the same name which the Russians previously had reported capturing.

On other fronts, the communique said there were "no important changes," while bad weather restricted the air force to reconnoitring flights.

(The Finns, making slight mention of the Karelian Isthmus struggle which has been in progress since the Russian invasion began on Nov. 30 and which has been a continual smashing attack since Feb. 1, said merely that Soviet forces "suffered heavily" and that the Finns are fighting defensive actions.

Finn Fortress Stands Firm.

(The fortress of Taipale, on the eastern end of the Mannerheim Line that spans the Karelian Isthmus, continued to stand firm against the Russian battering, the Finns reported.

(Coupling of the Russian and Finnish reports indicated that the Russion gains were in a broad spearhead bordered on the east by the stream-like Vuoski and on the west by the Gulf of Finland, with the point nearly touching the ruins of Viipuri.)

FIRST SIX MONTHS OF WAR

Quaker relief mission estimated that the number of persons killed in the siege of Warsaw, the bloodiest phase of the campaign, at 50,000.

This compares with the 100,000 Allied soldiers and 250,000 Germans killed at Ypres alone, and with the 70,000 Russians killed and wounded at Tannenberg.

30 Naval Vessels Lost

The naval war is largely a fight between Britain's great surface fleet and the submarines of Germany, although the French navy, Europe's second largest, is effective in the blockade against Germany and has sunk some ten submarines. The Allies together have destroyed perhaps 50.

The only French warship lost was the minelaying cruiser Pluton, sunk in an accidental explosion with a loss of 100 lives. Britain has lost 30 naval vessels, including 15 naval trawlers, and 2,602 officers and men who were killed and 60 taken prisoner.

Aside from the trawlers British naval losses were one aircraft carrier, one battleship, one merchant cruiser, six destroyers, four submarines and two minesweepers.

French air casualty figures are indefinite but the Royal Air force lists 736 men lost.

The biggest naval engagement was the all-day running fight on December 13 between the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee and three British cruisers, the Exeter, Ajax and Achilles, off the coast of Uruguay.

The 10,000-ton Graf Spee was run into Montevideo Harbor, where she later was scuttled by her crew, after 36 of her men had been killed and the British ships had lost 75, most of them on the Exeter, which was badly crippled but able to steam away under her own power.

Neutrals Threatened

The strain on neutrals, particularly in Scandinavia, the lowlands and in the Balkans, has been great. Belgium and the Netherlands are planted directly among the warring powers. Commerce on the high seas is a chief problem for Scandinavia, while the Balkans are a source of important raw materials sought by both sides.

Since Russia became embroiled in Finland Nov. 30, the threat of action in southeastern Europe has been heard. Turkey, non-belligerent ally of Britain and France, is on a virtual war footing. The Allies have massed thousands of troops in the Near East.

Italy, who at the beginning of the war pictured herself as ready to remain neutral and profit from increased trade, now is not so happy. What she wants is a piece of compromise so she can wield some influence.

SCOUTING PLANES ACTIVE

Paris, Feb. 20 (AP)—Allied and German planes scouted back and forth across the Rhine today, military quarters reported.

The flights followed up yesterday's exchanges of fire from casemates on both sides of the river boundary. No aerial engagements were reported.

This morning's army communique follows:

"Activity of advance units west of the Vosges ((Mountains). Casemate fire on both sides of the Rhine."

Within the silver case was another of gold finely wrought with intricate designs and heaped with precious stones.

Sharp Increase in Acreage Devoted To Raising Vegetables for Canning

Recent Contracts Call for Increase of Approximately Fifty Per Cent

PRICES NOT REVEALED

Sharp increase over 1940 acreage for production of peas, corn and tomatoes in this district, is noted in contracts signed between established canning companies, private organizations and farmers, a Department of Agriculture representative stated today.

This was substantiated by a prominent Prince Edward County canning official, who added that contracts recently signed between both parties, call for an acreage that will mean aproxipmately fifty per cent more production than in 1939.

While prices for the various commodities were not revealed, it is believed that they are of considerably higher ratio than those of a year ago. Then it is recalled, prices were as low as the bottom levels of over a period of ten years, but toward the end of the season, especially during the tomato harvest, the war caused a sudden uptrend in prices, while canning concerns removed quality bars and absorbed nearly everything the tomato vines produced.

Farmers in both Hastings and Prince Edward Counties, long recognized as one of the principal canning districts of the province, have signified their intention of assisting in the governments wartime program of "more production" by signing contracts for acreage well in excess of any previously used in the production of canning commodities.

Warehouses of the district, it is stated, are practically empty of stored goods. Heavy shipments last year before frost closed navigation, depleted stocks to a minimum.

MINES PLANTED ON ICE BY FINNS

Artillery Massed as Defence Against Possible Encircling Move by Red Army

Copenhagen, Feb. 29.—(AP) — Finns are planting mines on the ice of the Bay of Viipuri and massing all available artillery as a defence against possible encircling movement by Soviet Russian forces against Viipuri, it was said today in dispatches from Finland reaching Stockholm and Copenhagen newspapers.

Fresh Soviet troops—some dispatches estimated there were fully 19 Russian divisions, nearly 300,000 men, now on the Karelian Isthmus—were said to be forcing the fighting to a new intensity.

The Russians already have pounded their way up to the western edge of the Isthmus, directly south of Viipuri, and taken well fortified islands off the mainland.

The new Finnish defence precautions are aimed at preventing the Russians from using that newly-won territory for a drive northwest across the frozen bay to a point west of Viipuri which then would be menaced from two directions.

All non-combatants have been withdrawn from the village of Sakkijaervi, 25 miles west of Viipuri and presumably the immediate objective of any Russian drive across the ice and from other villages on the west coast of the bay.

BANK BANDIT TAKES REFUGE IN TORONTO THEATRE

Police Find Money Bag, Toy Pistol and Overcoat in Washroom

$646 TAKEN

Toronto, Feb. 29—(CP)— Police played a grim game of "bank night" at the Uptown Theatre last night, but the only apparent winner was a robber who took refuge there after holding up a north Toronto branch of the Bank of Toronto.

The real life melodrama which provided movie patrons with an unscheduled extra feature began at one p.m. when the robber seized $646 and fled in a taxicab, pursued by bank employees with blazing pistols.

The cab was abandoned near the theatre in downtown Toronto. A police search a few minutes later disclosed the money bag. A toy pistol and an overcoat in the washroom. The house lights were turned on, but the robber remained anonymous in the audiecne.

Guards were posted at the exits and bank employees vainly scrutinized every person who left. Last night, from the darkened stage, police played a searchlight up and down the seats, but the victims still could not pick out their man.

Gone With the Money

Finally, when the movie closed for the night, police admitted the robber must have gone with the—well, with the bank's money.

Search led to the theatre after William Moffatt, taxi-driver, was forced at gunpoint to drive the bandit from the scene of the crime to the vicinity of the playhouse.

The taxi containing the bandit was pursued from the bank by ledger keeper M. Hargreaves, who commandeered a passing taxi and fired five shots after the speeding car. Police joined in the chase a few minutes later but the robber always was one move ahead of them.

Russell Collier, bank teller, said the bandit asked for change of a $1 bill, then pushed a note through the wicket reading: "This is a holdup. Hand over what you've got." Collier pushed a handful of bills out the cage and as the bandit rushed from the bank, the teller fired two shots which lodged in the wall.

NO TIME FOUND FOR DISCUSSION OF DIRECT INTERVENTION

London, Feb. 29—(CP)— Prime Minister Chamberlain today refused to grant time to discuss in the House of Commons a request for direct Allied intervention in Finland.

He said "I can hold out no hope for time being found for the motion," which Oliver Locker-Lampson, Conservative, submitted because of "imminent peril of Finland5s overthrow."

The government had been asked to grant a day to debate the resolution.

New regulations restricting transfer of Palestine land from Arab to Jewish ownership will be debated next Wednesday and Air Ministry estimates on Thursday, Mr. Chamberlain announced.

In addition to these two ships going back into active service, five new battleships will soon reinforce the navy, Churchill disclosed.

Belleville Juveniles Advance Into Next Round of Playdowns By Defeating Picton by 6-3

Win Game in Picton by 4-1 Count After Being Tied at Home 2-2

PLAY MUCH BETTER

Kids Will Now Meet Regiopolis College of Kingston in the Next Round

Carrying too much speed all along the line, the Belleville juveniles advanced to the Ontario Juvenile Hockey Association second round by beating the Picton kids 4 to 1 in the Prince Edward County seat rink last night, winning the first round O.J.H.A. playdowns by a 6-3 score, after the teams had played a two-all tie here on Monday night. The Dennis-led Belleville kids now meet Regiopolis College Juveniles of Kingston in the second round of the provincial juvenile hockey play-offs with the first game of the series being played in the Hume Arena on Monday night next, with goals to count on the round.

Dick Barrett was the big noise with the local juveniles last night scoring three of Belleville's four counters, Bruce May getting the other goal. Carrying the play for the greater part of the night the Belleville kids played aggressive hockey and deserved their laurels in victory. McBride and Row gave Clark plenty of protection throughout, with Barrett, May, Goyer and Kellar carrying the front line attack, while Hart, the Picton goalie, starred for the homesters, with Frederick, Sergeant and Clapp showing good form.

Both Failed in First

There was no scoring in the initial period nor penalties meted out, as both teams failed miserably when inside their opponents' blue line and when in position to score. Belleville out-shot Picton eleven to eight with shots on net this frame. Picton opened the middle session by rushing the Belleville goal and scored, but it came after the referee's whistle had sounded following a pile-up in front of the Belleville net. Rosebush and Kellar went in to test Hart, who won the decision, but was badly cut on the chin in the following melee. Hart retired for repairs and when he returned Barrett whipped a face-off puck at Hart, O'Neill, the Picton defenceman deflecting the rubber into his own net. May and Whattam drew minor penalties this period.

To open the third period Picton moved five to the attack, which was followed by rapid penalties to McBride and Row, leaving Belleville without a defence for a short period. The locals covered well and Barrett scored his second goal of the game on a breakaway play to beat Hart close in. Picton retaliated with a combination play as Sergeant passed to Bob Frederick, inside the Belleville blue line and the latter beat Clark, who was given little protection on the play, Belleville being at full strength at the time.

Snags Loose Puck

With the count standing at 2-1 the homesters again moved four to the attack, which proved inadvisable as Bruce May snagged a loose puck and evaded the lone Picton defenceman to beat Hart for a third Belleville goal. Barrett notched his third counter and Belleville's fourth goal with a well-timed corner shot that beat Hart all of the way. Belleville protected splendidly in the dying moments.

The Belleville kids played aggressive hockey and were seen to check-back in a much more prolific manner than in their initial game of the O.J.H.A. season here. Although their combination plays failed to prove productive, the Dennis-led outfit showed more willingness to pass the puck and showed much improvement over the initial appearance of the season.

The line ups:

Belleville—Goal, Clark; defence, Row and McBride; centre, Robertson; wings, May and Barrett; subs, Goyer, McGuire, Fitzgibbon, Cronk, Kellar and Rosebush.

Picton — Goal, Hart; defence, Whattam and Ackerman; centre, K. Frederick; wings, Sergeant and R. Frederick; subs, O'Neill, Clapp, Woodward, Evans, Scott and Bolton.

Referees: Howie, Belleville, Wellbanks, Picton.

Summary:

TAYLOR PLAYING SMART HOCKEY FOR THE HORNETS

Former Oshawa Junior Star Will Soon be Recalled by the Leafs

HORNETS BEAT BEARS

Pittsburgh Club Now Within Point of Section-Leading Capitals

By the Canadian Press

It seems to be a pretty safe bet that one of these days Toronto Maple Leafs will be recalling little Billy Taylor of Oshawa to the National Hockey League.

The star of last year's Dominion junior championship series moved down to Pittsburgh Pirates of the International - American League for seasoning in mid-season, and has been piling up points with regularity ever since. Last night he figured in five goals as the fighting Pirates came from behind to whip Hershey Bears 7-3.

The victory moved Pittsburgh to within a point of the section-leading Indianapolis Capitals who went down 5-3 before Syracuse Stars. Taylor, with a goal and four assists, played a large part in the win, with Don Metz figuring in the same five goals.

Cleveland Barons kept within a game of Pittsburgh in the western section by edging out Philadelphia Ramblers 2-1, while Providence maintained their lead in the eastern section with a 3-3 tie with the second-place New Haven Eagles.

Two-third period goals while their opponents were short-handed gave Cleveland their fifth straight victory over Philadelphia. Johnny Polich was given a major at the close of the second period, and the Barons came through with two counters before his return in the third. Philadelphia got half the deficit back when Lloyd Russell scored half-way through the period.

Santa Anita Derby Is Wide-Open Race

Los Angeles, Feb. 29—(AP) — Turf history may repeat itself in the sixth running of the $100,000 added Santa Anita Handicap Saturday, and the outcome should provide another smashing climax to the world's richest horse race.

Looking over the probable starters, there are the two who last year burned up the track, and themselves, in setting a sizzling pace—Whichcee and Specify. The battle they put on stands out as a vivid part of that race.

Then there is Kayak 11, the C. S. Howard Argentine who came up from behind, caught and passed the tiring pace setters, and went on to win. Ranked with him is his stablemate, Seabiscuit.

A. A. Baroni, Specify's owner and the man who saddled Top Row for his triumph in the 1936 Santa Anita, is high on his six-year-old's chances.

"Specify," said the Nevada horseman, "is definitely the horse to beat."

The second game proved to be more of an even battle and both teams were practically on even terms at the half way mark with the Belleville lads taking the nod at half time 17-14. H. Burley paced the home quintette accounting for fourteen points with Cole scoring eight and Atkins six. For the Cobourg lads Campbell was best, getting eleven points as Payne and Ravensdale accounted for four apiece.

The teams:

Cobourg "Grads": Campbell 11, Payne 4, Lucas 2, Holmes, Ravensdale 4, Blaker 2, Packinson 2, Maiglis and Blasterah.

Belleville "Y" Intermediates: Cole 8, Wickerson, Burley 14, Schrieder 4, Dickens, Wright, Atkins 6, Cowan.

B. C. I. JUNIOR CAGERS ON TOP

Defeat Albert College Cagers in First Game in Playoff for Title

Belleville Collegiate Junior Interscholastic basketball quintette will carry a one point lead into the second game of the Bay of Quinte Junior C.O.S.S.A. final playdowns as the result of a last period 27 to 26 cage victory over the Albert College kids on the latters' court yesterday. Tied at the termination of the group schedule, the two squads opened a home and home series, with points to count on the round, on the Albert College court yesterday with the return game slated for the Collegiate gymn a week hence.

Trailing 18 to 11 at the halfway mark the local "Collegians" rallied strongly in the second half to outscore the home quintette by eight points and thereby eke out a one point victory to haul into the final game next week. Coach Alf Moulden's Albert College cagers were somewhat out-lucked in the second session, however, although the Collegiate finished strongly.

Parliament led the winners with 14 of their 27 points, Cunningham clicking splendidly in the last half with three timely baskets. Melevaer and Brawley carried the scoring punch for Albert.

TRAINING CAMP BRIEFS

Lakeland, Fla., Feb. 29—(AP) — Young Harold Newhauser, Detroit schoolboy pitcher who was something of a sensation in the American League junior tournaments, is winning plenty of attention at the Tigers' camp.

"That kid," said Hank Greenberg, "is going to make a great pitcher."

Pasadena, Calif., Feb. 29—(AP)—Jimmy Dykes, Chicago White Sox manager, may have plenty of problems before and after the season opens, but he is rid of all but one of his holdout worries. Signing of Mike Kreevich and Jackie Hayes yesterday reduce the holdout brigade to a lone sentry, pitcher Clint Brown.

San Bernardino, Calif., Feb. 29—(AP)—Accustomed to rather sedate spring training, Pittsburgh Pirates got their first taste of the methods of fiery Frank Frisch yesterday. On the first day of practice he sent the Bucco batterymen through a five-inning intra-squad game. Bob Klinger's crew defeated Joe Bowman's 12-7.

Avalon, Calif., Feb. 29—(AP)—Pitcher Larry French, now nursing a sore spot in his left shoulder, may get some southpaw support on the Chicago Cubs' pitching staff this season. Manager Gabby Hartnett is enthusiastic over rookies Ken Raffensberger and Verne Olsen.

Regardless as to whether the Rangers or the Bruins finish on top of the N.H.L. at the conclusion of their schedule, the series for the N.H.L. championship will open in Madison Square Garden on March 19th. Yesterday the Board of Governors of the N.H.L. met and decided to open the major hockey league play-offs on March 19th and continue almost every other night until the Stanley Cup series is completed. The Rangers and Bruins will meet for the N.H.L. championship and the subsequent winner then awaits the Stanley Cup eliminations of the other four teams in the race. Today the only two clubs not assured of a berth are the Canadiens and Americans, with the Canadiens in a bad last position. While the Bruins and Rangers are engaging in an alternating best-in-seven series, the third and fourth and fifth and sixth placed clubs will play respective two-in-three series, with the two ultimate winners meeting and then the winner of this fourth series meeting the N.H.L. champions in the Stanley Cup finals, which will commence about March 31st.

As was the case two years ago, it remains to have Belleville's juveniles in the O.J.H.A. provide our post season hockey. Last night in Picton Bill Dennis' local kids played aggressive hockey and deserved their 4-1 win over the Prince Edward County kids to advance themselves into the second round of the O.J.H.A. versus Regiopolis College (Kingston). The Belleville kids showed a marked improvement over their initial appearance here and played much better hockey in all departments. The defence stood up splendidly, while the forwards were marking their checks much better than heretofore. Arrangements to have the second round O.J.H.A. playdowns between Kingston and Belleville open here on Monday were completed today and with the improvement shown by Bill Dennis' charges last night, this series should prove most popular in Belleville. Dick Barrett was the boy with the big stick for the locals last night as he bagged three of the locals' four goals, but McBride and Row went well on the defence, as Goyer, Kellar and May carried well.

Although devoid of O.H.A. hockey for the rest of this season, local hockey fans are still in line for some good puck-chasing. There are still our juvenile kids, practically all Belleville born, then we find the Albert College still in the senior Interscholastic C.O.S.S.A. puck hunt, while efforts to revive the old Robertson Cup post-season hockey series between the various rural league winners is now under way. We understand that some six or eight rural league clubs have signified their willingness to compete in a post-season series, at the Hume Arena, to be conducted similar to the Kingston Van Horne series. At any rate we understand there is to be a meeting at the Hume Arena Friday night following which some concrete information will be available for the fans regarding the subject.

Alf Moulden's Albert College junior cagers ran into some grief at the hands of the B.C.I. kids when the latter rallied to win the first game of the Bay of Quinte group C.O.S.S.A. play-offs 27 to 26 yesterday. The B.C.I. seniors have cinched their group honours, but their junior contemporaries have yet to dispose of the Albert kids in the return game.

Senior Interscholastic hockey moves into the local sports limelight tonight as Pete Beach's Albert College sextette meets the fast Norwood High, champions of the Trent Valley loop, in the C.O.S.S.A. playdowns. In preparing for their secondary school hockey play-offs, the Alberts beat the Air Force, North End A. C. and Stirling High in exhibition matches. The roster of the "tri-color" brings together players from all parts of the Dominion. For instance goalie Tony Christian is from away out west, Prince Rupert, B.C. being Tony's birthplace, Captain "Des" Partridge is from Beaverton, Alf Moulden and "Ag" Francis from London and "Lefty" Loughee from Fitzroy Harbour. The Norwood High sextette, headed by Jack Puffer, who also plays in the Trenton Valley League, beat Tweed High in the T. V. Interscholastic finals and will doubtless give the Alberts a tough argument tonight.

Do you remember when President A. E. Gilroy of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, landing at Halifax on his way home from the Winter Olympics in Germany four years ago today, denied having protested the inclusion of Jimmy Foster and Alex Archer, Winnipeg hockey players, in the English Olympic hockey team? The C.A.H.A. had suspended Foster and Allen, and Gilroy charged the sudden change in the rulings governing nationality of Olympic competitors was the "worst manipulation in sport history."

The Belleville "Y" cagers split a dual bill of basketball with the Cobourg teams last night. "Whizz" Cowan's "Y" girls losing to the Cobourg lassies 25 to 15, while the "Y" senior boys beat Cobourg 33 to 25. Incidentally the Cobourg girls squad is an intermediate "A" team, while the Belleville girls are in the "B" bracket. Both were exhibition tilts.

Sport Spice:—A number of local fight fans are planning to take in Monday's Pace-Salica world champion bantamweight crown fight at Toronto..Did you know that Toronto is considered one of the best fly and bantamweight fight towns on the continent, but Queen City fans won't warm up to the heavier battlers ....Secretary Vern McIlwraith of the provincial softball body, says the O.A.S.A. will discuss ways and means of assisting Ontario soldiers now overseas....A good idea might be to have each community set aside a percentage of their gate receipts to be afforded where needed boys from their own district, thus the softball heads would be in direct communication with their own....There is talk around town of a highclass junior "B" puck team for Belleville next season, which is to be hoped for.

DOMINIONS TURN ON ST. KITTS TO WIN BY 7 TO 2

Hamilton Prolongs Series in O.H.A. Senior Race With St. Catharines

GOODYEARS WIN

Port Colborne Shutout 9-0 With Free-for-All Terminating the Contest

By the Canadian Press

Form took a somersault in the Ontario Hockey Association Senior "A" series playoffs last night. Hamilton Dominions, down two games to St. Catharines, turned on their semi-final opponents with a vengeance to emerge 7-2 victors. Meanwhile Toronto Goodyears were blasting Port Colborne 9-0 in the other semi-final.

Playing at home the Saints started the game as though capable of ousting Hamilton from the playoffs in three straight games in the best-of-five series. Reynolds lashed home the first point at the halfway mark of the first period but from then on Hamilton outplayed, out-bumped and out-scored their rivals.

McLeod zipped home the equalizer in the last minute of the opening frame and in the second two goals by Tonn and one by Barlow gave the winners a substantial lead. Conick added two more to the Hamilton total and Barlow one in the third session before Catlin netted the final goal for the Saints.

Dominions, who meet the Saints at home in the fourth contest Friday night, lost Stan Robertson in the second period when the flashy wingman crashed into the boards and fractured an ankle.

Little Trouble With Ports

Toronto, defending champions and leaders of the group at the close of the regular schedule, had little trouble with the Ports from a puck manipulating standpoint. A free-for-all involving 27 players broke out in the dying minutes, however, and brought the fans from their seats for the first time in the game.

Toronto won the first game of the best-of-five series but lost the second. The fourth will be played at Port Colborne Friday night.

Inglis, Laurent, O'Flaherty and Turney led the Toronto scoring parade in the first period. O'Flaherty and Turney added a brace in the second while in the third Imlach scored twice and Cooper once.

Draper of Goodyears and Allan of the Sailors drew major penalties for precipitating the free-for-all.

Pro Puck Personalities

ART JACKSON

Boston Bruins

When Art Jackson made his pro hockey debut with Toronto Maple Leafs five years ago he was simply "the Busher's young brother," the reference, of course, being to Harvey Jackson—great left wing on the Toronto "kid line", at that time potting goals regularly. Now both Harvey and his fellow linesman, Chuck Conacher, are with Americans, while their younger brothers, Art Jackson and Roy Conacher — both perform for the Bruins. The younger Jackson joined the Leafs from St. Michael's College juniors of Toronto (his native city), who had captured the Memorial Cup in 1934. Most of his first pro season was spent at Syracuse, the following one with the Leafs and the next shuffling between both. Art Ross entered the picture at this point and purchased him for Boston. He played the 1937-38 season with the Bruins and was loaned to Americans for last season, to jam quite a bit of juggling into a few hockey seasons.

He's back with the Bruins this winter, however, currently making the plays for Herbie Cain and Eddie Wiseman on the team's third line.

Last season with the Amerks was his best as he posted 12 goals and one more assist for 25 points. Career totals until start of this season: 29 goals, 34 assists for 63 points, and 59 minutes served in penalties. Twenty-four years old last December.

In the club locker Harry Smallwood was imitating Chet Kirby's slow manner of speaking when someone had said:

"Gosh! Harry, if I couldn't actually see you there I'd bet my last dime it was Chet himself talking. You'd make a fortune doing that kind of stuff on the stage," he added, laughing and putting down his empty highball glass.

Other golfers, in various stages of undress, noisily endorsed what the speaker had said.

That was what bred the idea in Harry Smallwood's brain. It came to him like a flash as he sat at his office desk soon after lunch on the following day, Monday.

He stiffened, and thought furiously. Then a smile passed over his face, but it was not a pleasant smile.

"And now is just the time to find her out," he thought. "Chet said he'd be at Rye all this afternoon looking over some lots he thought of buying. And if my voice doesn't fool her I can pass it off as a joke and say I really phoned to let her know I'd be late for dinner or something."

Having asked the operator for his home number, Harry Smallwood cleared his throat and waited.

Presently his wife answered.

"Oh, hullo, Audrey," he said, simulating Chet Kirby's slight drawl to perfection. "You know who's speaking, eh?"

There was a short pause; then Audrey Smallwood extremely pretty voice replied: "Well, no. Who is it?"

"Come, come!" There was a hint of affectionate reproof in the way this was said. "Mean to say you don't recognize your old Chet's voice?"

"Oh, oh, yes. Of course. How are you Chet?',

Harry's eyes narrowed as he noted his wife's excited tone.

"Listen, dear," he said. "I got through my business out at Rye sooner than I expected. I'm just leaving there now. Could you stand it if I dropped in on you for a half-hour, or longer?"

"Stand it! You know I'd adore it."

"You're a darling, Audrey. We can have a cocktail and a cosy little chat if you've got nothing better to do, maybe?"

"What do you mean maybe?" Audrey said, gurgling deliciously. "Have I ever anything better to do when you've wanted to see me, sweetheart? Don't say things like that."

An ecstatic murmur came from the other end of the wire.

Audrey went on: "How soon can you be here, darling?"

"Let's see. About three-thirty."

"But make it sooner if you can, Chet dear."

"I'll surely try. And, by the way, I s'pose there's not a chance of anyone—you know who I mean—catching an early train and crashing in on our party, eh?"

"Why the sudden panic? He's never walked in on us, yet. You know he never gets here before seven."

"Audrey, you don't think he suspects anything about us, do you?"

"Not a thing, honey dear. Don't worry. He's much too dumb to suspect so long as we go on being careful. Now jump into your car and burn up the roads."

Whereupon, Audrey hung up.

At the other end Harry Smallwood shuddered.

He was almost blind with rage, yet he felt too, a certain triumphant intoxication that his ruse had worked so neatly.

On the plea that his wife was sick he excused himself at the office for the remainder of the day. "If she isn't sick now," he told himself, "she's damn soon going to be."

In the train he rehearsed the speech he intended to deliver to Audrey.

Women were all alike, just a bunch of cheats.

What suckers men were to marry them. He'd show her whether she could play fast and loose while he was sweating his soul away to make money and keep a roof over her head.

And he'd show Chet Kirby something too.

First, he'd wring a full confession from his wife.

After that, he would make up his mind how to deal with the pair of them.

What a swell shock Audrey had coming to her!

A short taxi ride—he was too impatient to walk—from the station brought him to his small stucco house.

He paid the driver and went inside purposefully. His expression was like a storm-cloud, but his blood tingled in pleasant anticipation of exploding the metaphorical bomb he was bringing home to his wife.

"Audrey," he called sharply as soon as he had shut the frontdoor.

There was no answer.

"Audrey!" he shouted this time. "Where the devil is she?"....?

An envelope standing against a vase caught his eye.

He strode over and snatched it up. It was addressed to him. He tore it open.

The letter it contained ran as follows:

Dear Harry:

Your imitation of Chet's voice this afternoon was so amazingly good that I must surely have mistaken you for him but for the fact that he was sitting in this very room when you telephoned. Incidentally, he had never before been in the house with me alone. But when I realised how despicably low-down you were in laying that trap for me, I couldn't resist the temptation to lead you on. Also, I made a momentous decision during our conversation.

For almost three years Chet has been in love with me. For almost that time I have been in love with him, but I tried to bluff that I was not. I was old-fashioned enough to believe that it was my duty to stand by you so long as you treated me decently. Chet made no attempt to coax me away from you.

He did not go to Rye today. He decided overnight to go off to Europe and live there for a year or so to try and get me out of his mind. He came to tell me that he was sailing tomorrow.

After putting up the receiver this afternoon I kissed Chet for the first time in my life; then I announced that I would go to Europe with him. So now I am through with making ends meet in the suburbs for a husband who obviously did not think much of me. Chet, as you know, is very well off, and he will be able to take good care of me both before and after we are married.

Good-by, Harry. Give up doing imitations—and being one.

Your ex-wife,

Audrey.

For several minutes Harry Smallwood stood there like a man in a trance. Audrey would never come back to him. He knew her.

The light sound of the letter falling from his hands to the rug obtruded on his thoughts.

He looked about at the familiar things in the living room—the cushions, the chairs, the standing lamps. Somehow they looked different from when he had last seen them. It was as though they accused him of robbing them of their mistress.

He began to walk slowly through the house.

The kitchen was immaculate; Audrey always kept it so.

In the bedroom there was a faint smell of the perfume she used. From the night table he picked up the book she had been reading the night before. Then, suddenly, Harry Smallwood felt insupportably tired and old. He sank heavily on to Audrey's bed and lay there with his face buried in her pillow.

BAREHEADED YOUTH ROBS HAMILTON SHOP OF $13 IN CASH

Hamilton, Ont., Feb. 29 (CP) — A bareheaded young man held up and robbed a chain grocery store at Emerald and Wilson Streets here Wednesday and escaped with $13 in cash.

After politely requesting a store attendant, Miss Agnes Riehl, to make change for him, the youth suddenly whipped out a revolver and forced her to hand over some bills. He immediately ran out of the store and eluded pursuit taken up by two boys, James Morton, 13, and William Hampson, 10, who heard Miss Riehl's cry that she had been held up.

AT THE BELLE

"ETERNALLY YOURS"

With Loretta Young and David Niven starred as the romantic team, Walter Wanger's new comedy romance, "Eternally Yours," is now on the Belle screen. The new picture is one of the finest and funniest pictures to issue from Hollywood in many months and definitely takes its place as one of the season's top-notch films.

"Eternally Yours", was directed by Tay Garnett, which means that it has showmanship, tempo, verve, excitement and thrills. It is a comedy romance in the best sense of the word—its dialogue is sharp, crisp and witty; its scenes are a delightful blend of romance, comedy and drama; it moves with pace and suspense; it is photographed with imagination and beauty. In fact, special mention must be made of the background shots and special effects which have been woven into the story with remarkable realism.

In support of the two stars, "Eternally Yours" has a featured cast including Billie Burke, Zasu Pitts, Hugh Herbert, Broderick Crawford and Ralph Graves, and each in turn must be credited with excellent performances. Also, it must be mentioned in passing that the screenplay from which "Eternally Yours" was filmed was writteen by two of Hollywood's leading scenarists, Gene Towne and Graham Baker.

"Bad Little Angel" Gripping

"Bad Little Angel" poignant romance of childhood, brings two of Hollywood's outstanding child players to the Belle Theatre in the persons of Virginia Weidler of "The Women" and "Out West With the Hardys", and Gene Reynolds of "Boys Town" and "They Shall Have Music." The picture, hailed as the emotional successor to "Boys Town", tells the story of a little orphanage waif who has been taught implicit faith in the Bible. She runs away from the orphanage to a small New Jersey village where a kind newspaper editor plans to adopt her. He loses his job. The father of a boy who befriends her is the town drunkard. How the child, with her faith and courage, so changes the lives of the different characters that their problems are solved is the crux of the plot. Comedy, pathos, inspiration and dramatic thrills are all in the story, based on the novel by Margaret Turnbull. Players include Lois Wilson, returned to the screen from three years on the New York stage, as Miss Weidler's foster mother, Ian Hunter as her foster father, Guy Kibbee as the harsh town millionaire, Henry Hull as the town drunkard who reforms under the child's influence, Elizabeth Patterson and Reginald Owen. Toto, the famous little dog of "The Wizard of Oz" plays Virginia's pet, "Rags." Excitement includes the rescue of Hunter from a blazing three-storey factory, a dramatic encounter in a newspaper office, a trip in a quaint old train of 1865. Intimate glimpses of family life provide natural comedy such as is seen in the "Judge Hardy" pictures, and poignant dramatic moments include the orphanage sequence, the child's prayer for guidance when she feels that she brings bad fortune to all who come near her, and her dramatic plea to the town millionaire to save the position of her foster-father. Antiques gathered from all over the country went into the quaint old sets representing homes, offices, a town street and park of the early Nineties.

Come to the Belle Theatre and see $20.00 awarded to last week's True-False Game winner. The presentation will be made on the Belle stage.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Mexican Spitfire"

Brought together for the second time as a comedy team, vivacious Lupe Velez and Leon Errol contribute their respective laugh-making talents to RKO Radio's merry film, "Mexican Spitfire," brisk and breezy comedy-feature presentation now playing at the McCarthy theatre.

A sequel to Miss Velez' recent romantic comedy, "The Girl From Mexico," the current offering is a continuation of Lupe's madcap exploits as an entertainer in New York. The sparkling story, however, is complete within itself, and offers an individual plot that is loaded with laughs and hilarious complications.

According to the amusing story, Lupe and her husband, Donald Woods, advertising man, have just returned from their honeymoon. The efforts of a jealous ex-fiancee to break up the marriage and the weird devices of Leon Errol, as Lupe's uncle by marriage, to straighten out the newlyweds' marital problems, make for the sidesplitting situations in the story.

Errol, former Ziegfeld comedian, plays a triple role in this offering. He is cast as the groom's uncle, then as a British baron, and is also seen as the uncle impersonating the Englishman. It is the mistaken identity phases of the story that bring about most of the rollicking complications. Directed by Leslie Goodwins, "Mexican Spitfire", was produced by Cliff Reid, and features in the supporting cast, in addition to those mentioned, Elizabeth Risdon and Cecil Kellaway.

Edgar Kennedy Comedy

More laugh-crammed fun on the program is presented in the new Edgar Kennedy comedy "Feathered Pests" which is a cyclone of laughs from start to finish, plus a Walt Disney technicolor cartoon, Mickey Mouse in "Brave Little Tailor" which is rated as great entertainment. An all new episode of "Kit Carson" is also shown in addition to the above.

Smiley Burnette in the new Republic picture, "South of the Border," starring Gene Autry now showing at the Capitol with an added feature Tailspin Tommy in "Sky Patrol."

AT THE CAPITOL

"South of the Border"

"South of the Border," now playing at the Capitol Theatre, enlarges on the theme of a popular song widely exploited on the air networks, developing it into one of the most entertaining and satisfying westerns we have seen to date. Gene Autry, whose popularity is the nine days' wonder of the amusement field, brings his colorful personality and his melodious voice to the screen in a warm and glowing panorama of life south of the Rio Grande.

The story follows closely the theme song of the same name; the idyllic romance of a cowboy, engaged in government work, with a Spanish senorita who ultimately enters the convent. Autry gives his best to the role, and may be credited with the film's outstanding success.

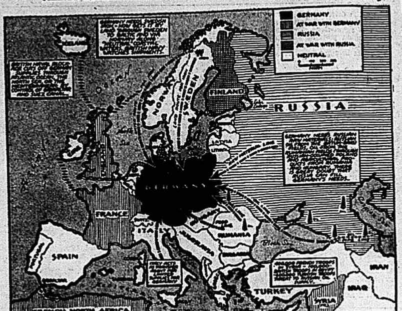
Smiley Burnette, a lovable and laughable comedian, contributes his share of laughs, and Mary Lee, a newcomer from the New York air-waves, vocalist of Ted Weems' orchestra, turns in an effective "kid" characterization. Lovely Lupita Tovar scores as the senorita, with June Storey equally effective in the role of Lois, the siren char- met.

Supporting players include Clare Dubrey, Duncan Renaldo, Buddy Gilmore, Sid Sherman, Art Wenzel, Wesley Peterson, George Thall, Dick Botiller and others.

According to carefully kept statistics, more than 172,000,000 people in Great Britain have seen the twenty-four Gene Autry pictures which have been released there since 1936. Gene's newest picture, made on his completion of his triumphant tour of the British Isles is "South of the Border."

On the same programme another feature brings to the screen further adventures with Tailspin Tommy in "Sky Patrol," John Trent, Marjorie Reynolds and Jackie Coogan are the stars. To complete the bill a good colored cartoon "Little Lion Hunter" and the 6th chapter of the thrilling detective serial "Red Barry" is shown.

ALLIES CONCENTRATE ON CUTTING NAZI TRADE LINES



Germany's greatest war problem is one of supply. Iron, oil and food imports are of vital importance to her. Her iron problem involves Sweden and Norway. Her oil shortage involves Rumania and Russia. Her food needs put Hungary and Rumania on the anxious seat. Italy comes into the picture as a transfer agent of supplies bound for Germany. Progress of war sees Allies concentrating more and more on cutting the Nazis' import and export lines.

TURKISH - YUGOSLAV TETE-A-TETE

Sukro Saracoglu, foreign minister of Turkey, is shown, RIGHT, chatting with Dragisha Tsvetkovitch, prime minister of Yugoslavia, during Saracoglu's recent visit to Belgrade for the Balkan conference. Although the Balkan conference failed to pledge military co-operation in the event of an attack by an outside power, observers believe that if Rumania is invaded, Turkey backed by the Near East Allied army, will intervene. Yugoslavia is believed now to be under the benevolent wing of Italy.

Leon and Gordon Channell combined to score for Cloverdale. Each team added one in the second, Hicks from Welsh for Picton and McNeill from McDonald for Cloverdale. McNeill from Grant, tied it up in the middle of the last period.

LUCK IS TURNING ON MIKE JACOBS

Second Bout in Week Has to be Postponed Due to Illness of Participants

New York, Feb. 29—(AP)— For a long time the breaks have been good for Mike Jacobs, the fabulous boxing promoter, but today heavyweight Lee Savold is in a hospital and Uncle Mike is confronted with the loss of his second big bout in less than a week.

Savold, a rugged Des Moines, Ia., corn belter, being groomed for champion Joe Louis, was booked for a 12-round bout with Bob Pastor tomorrow night in Madison Square Garden.

Yesterday he had a cold and didn't go to the gymnasium to work out, so the boxing commission sent Dr. William Walker around to the fighter's hotel. Dr. Walker sent Savold to a hospital for a rest. The doctor pronounced his illness influenza.

The bout seemed to be off, even though an official announcement awaited the arrival of Jacobs by plane from Florida, where a light heavyweight title scrap between champion Billy Con, and Gus Lesnevich set for last night had folded up. In that case it was an abscessed gland under Conn's right armpit.

Police Blotter

Complaints that a disturbance was in progress at a house dance being conducted at 74 South George Street resulted in Constables Evans and Thomson hastening to the scene last night. Upon the arrival of the constabulary, however, peace and quietness reigned but police warned those present regarding any possible resumption of trouble. An argument, which culminated in minor fisticuffs was the reason of the police call, the authorities stated today.

Parked Car Removed

P.C. Ellis ordered the removal of a parked motor car off Pinnacle Street last night. The vehicle was parked in a position whereby the front of the car hindered the progress of pedestrians who used the city sidewalk. The car was taken to a nearby garage and later claimed by G. H. Shaw of the R.C.A.F.

Two minor charges preferred under the Highway Traffic Act constituted today's session of County Police Court held before Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C., at the Court House buildings. Acting Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson presented the information, both of which found pleas of guilty tendered by the accused persons and in writing. The minimum fines were paid.

Only nine transients appeared seeking shelter at the police station last night.

Picton I.O.D.E. Ship Soldiers' Comforts Overseas

Picton—Comforts which are sure to be gratefully appreciated were shipped overseas on Monday by Sir Thomas Picton Chapter I.O.D.E. These were sent to Lt.-Col. Sherman Young, O.C., Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment and will be distributed where most needed.

Field comforts shipped were 126 pairs of socks, 30 sweaters, 16 pairs wristlets, 5 scarves, 5 Balaclava caps, 2 pairs mitts. Miss Ida Martin is convener of field comforts.

Hospital supplies sent included 40 pairs pyjamas, 9 pairs bed socks, 12 pneumonia jackets, 5 pairs operating stockings. Mrs. Bruce MacDonald is convener of hospital supplies for the I.O.D.E.

Also included were two cartons of cigarettes and a quantity of magazines.

Donations to the I.O.D.E. include $100 grant in January and $100 in February from the County, $25 donation from F. L. Ward, K.C., also $5.00 for I.O.D.E. work by Mrs. (Dr.) Morley Currie.

Mrs. Reg. Abraham is convener of the I.O.D.E. war committee and they aim to remember soldiers of the local regiment as far as possible.

Dr. Merlin Hicks, a son of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Hicks, here, has been accepted by the R.C.A.F. as a medical officer and will take up his new duties at Ottawa soon. He has been on the staff of the Victoria Hospital at London, Ont., and was formerly with hospitals in Toronto and Montreal. His brother, Capt. Winston Hicks, is with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, now overseas.

The recently organized Prince Edward Crop Improvement Association has decided to hold a seed fair here in March as part of their program.

Rev. J. P. Reycraft was the speaker at the meeting of the Phudel-a-tee Club at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Walden recently. He gave an interesting talk on his travels in Europe and told of some of the interesting people he had met. Miss Helen MacDonald presided and a social time was spent.

The Prince Edward Yacht Club has not yet decided if they will hold the annual Gold Cup Race and Regatta this year or not. Many of the leading members have been called away due to the war. The last three such events have been very successful and attracted leading drivers of Canada and the United States and given the town much publicity. A definite decision will be made in the near future.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Lipson have returned from a trip to Florida.

Miss Marjorie Gough opened her home at Bloomfield Tuesday for a tea in aid of the Bloomfield War Emergency Committee. There was a good attendance. Spring flowers were used in decoration. Mrs. John Mallory invited the guests to the tea room where tea was poured by Mrs. Arthur Rightmyer and Mrs. Howard Arkett. Assisting in serving were Mrs. K. E. McQueen, Mrs. James Gough, Mrs. Harold Henderson. Mrs. Howard Pride received the fees.

Snow plows are still busy in the country. Many of the lesser used roads are still blocked. Snow is piled as high as six feet along the road sides in some sections.

Mrs. George Cook is home from Kingston for a few days but will return to be with her daughter, Olga, who is ill in hospital there.
